ARBITRATOR DOUBLES GOV'T BID

An arbitrator has awarded the owner of a small car repair shop in Saanich $169,000, twice what the provincial government offered when it expropriated his property earlier this year.

The government also gets stuck with costs of the case, estimated as high as $30,000.

The expropriation involves the shop and land of Vlado Miletic, on Maple between Tolmie and Cloverdale, wanted by the departments of highways and public works for parking and for their own repair depot.

Miletic operated the two-bay business under the name VM Auto Repairs, specializing in Volkswagen servicing.

The government initially offered about $75,000 for the property and Miletic refused it, indicating he was prepared to accept about $135,000.

Settling the value went to a single arbitrator, chartered accountant Ronald Campion, who held four days of hearings earlier this month. He issued his award Friday.

In it he values Miletic's land, a parcel about 52 by 173 feet, at $103,380.66; improvements at $44,594; equipment at $5,844 and business disturbance at $15,000, for a total of $168,818.66.

The government in a later offer said it was ready to pay $83,000. Because the award is above the government bid, the province is also required to pay costs.

Quebec Aid Eyed

OTTAWA — Urban Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet says Ottawa will seek other ways to have Quebecers benefit from the federal home insulation subsidies plan following the Parti Quebecois' "sadistic" decision not to participate in the program.

Ouellet told a news conference yesterday it was too early to say just what Ottawa could do to make Quebecers eligible for the federal grants of up to $350 to insulate their homes.

He was "very disappointed" that the PQ would "deprive" its citizens of the federal government's $1.4 billion nationwide program which is due to start Sept. 1.

Quebec Energy Minister Guy Joron announced Thursday that Quebec would not take part because federally imposed conditions for participation were an intrusion into areas of provincial responsibility.

Ouellet rejected this view saying Ottawa does have jurisdiction in this field through Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. The conditions for joining were also "minimal."

To share in the plan, each province must agree to remove the sales tax on insulating materials, enforce lower highway speed limits, impose more stringent building codes and encourage individual metering of gas and electricity in apartment buildings.

The aim of the plan is to lessen energy consumption, and Joron left the door open by saying there should be a federal-provincial conference on the issue soon. The "present conditions" were unacceptable.

Ouellet said that 305,000 Quebec homes built before 1921 would have been immediately eligible for the grants and about 1.5 million more during the next seven years of the program.

Not only would there be energy savings, he said, but it would inject hundreds of millions of dollars into a Quebec economy suffering from high unemployment.

A spokesman for the minister said both the Ontario and Alberta governments have reservations about the program also but that only Quebec had issued a flat no.

Pulp Union Gets Nod To Sign Up Bosses

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Labor Relations Board has ruled that first-line pulp mill supervisors are employees under the Labor Code and eligible for trade union organization.

Although the ruling dealt specifically with supervisory and technical personnel at the Tahsis Co. Ltd. pulp mill at Gold River, it opens the door to future organization of supervisors and junior management in the forest products industry.

The board's ruling rejected a bid by the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada to represent a group of supervisors on the grounds that an insufficient number were signed up, but its decision on the status of such personnel was clearly meant to establish principles for future applications.

Although the union originally sought representation for only 34 employees, the board found seven more workers who could be included in the proposed unit, making a total of 41.

The union's application was rejected because at the time it was received there were only 14 people, or less than 35 per cent of the 41 proposed for the unit, signed up as members in good standing.

The significance with which the board viewed the application was reflected in its decision to hold a two-day hearing in Gold River so it could tour the mill facilities and hear evidence from employees who would be included in the proposed unit.

PHYSIOPSYCHO . . . ETC. SPORTS CENTRE SET

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada's first physiopsychotheropanatomy will exercise more than just tongues when it opens in 1978 — the mouthful describes a $3.3 million YM-YWCA family sports facility.

George Watt, executive-director of the Vancouver-area YMCA, and an organizer for the project, said it will be one of the first fully co-educational facilities in Canada.

Watt said the elongated name comes from the traditional YMCA slogan of body, mind and spirit and signals a new approach for a facility.

He said the organization traditionally provided facilities for either men or women, but a family of four could arrive at the new development and play together or go off to four different activities.

The facility includes a swimming pool, gymnasiums, handball courts and steambath facilities. Funding comes from the B.C. government, the city and private donations.

Fifth Slump in Row For Canadian Dollar

Times News Service

For the fifth day in a row, the Canadian dollar declined in value on New York money markets Friday.

At the close of trading, the Royal Bank reported the Canadian dollar was worth 6½ cents less than the U.S. dollar, or $0.9348, down a quarter of a cent from Thursday's close.

The Canadian dollar has been dropping in value in relation to the U.S. dollar for the past year.

The gain by the U.S. dollar, however, come in what some dealers called a confused and illogical market.

The price of gold continued to drop Friday, closing at $144.125 U.S. an ounce in both London and Zurich, Europe's two major bullion-trading centres.

2,4-D Critics Challenged

PENTICTON (CP) — Penticton Mayor Al Kenyon challenged Okanagan health officials and environmentalists Friday to produce "concrete evidence" that the chemical 2,4-D used to combat milfoil weed in nearby Skaha Lake is dangerous to human health.

Mayor Kenyon was angry with statements by Jay Lewis, spokesman for the Okanagan Environmental Coalition, and two health officers that several hundred people risked their health by ignoring warning signs and swimming in the lake immediately after application of the chemical.

"We don't question the fact that it takes large doses of the chemical to cause problems, but no one knows what the long term effects are," said Lewis. "It's well known that 2,4-D causes cancer and birth defects."

Kenyon called the statement that hundreds of people were exposed "just not true."

"I want to see them come up with some concrete evidence once and for all," he said. "Let them put up or shut up."

Kenyon said the herbicide has been used in the Okanagan for between 20 and 30 years and there is no evidence relating it to birth defects or other problems for Okanagan Valley residents.

Karl Marsden, provincial water protection biologist and information officer for the combined mechanical and chemical weed-eradication scheme, said the fact that dead fish were found in the application area following the treatment means nothing "at this point." (See also page 15)

135% Increase In Earnings By Mac-Blo

VANCOUVER (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. reports net earnings of $23.6 million or $1.07 a share for the first six months of 1977, compared with $10.1 million or .48 a share for the corresponding period in 1976 — an increase of 135%.

Sales and other income amounted to $827 million, up 11.5 per cent from $742 million last year.

FERRY TRAFFIC HEAVY

Holiday weekend traffic on B.C. Ferries has been heavy with the longest lineups at Swartz Bay.

A ferry spokesman said mainland-bound motorists waited up to two hours this morning but there were no waits at Tsawwassen.

On the Departure Bay-Horseshoe Bay run there were one-sailing waits at both ends.

Friday afternoon the lineups were slightly longer with the maximum wait of three sailings at Swartz Bay.

No one was left behind at the last sailing anywhere in the system.

TV-Viewing Leads Canadian Leisure Activities

OTTAWA (CP) — Television was the most popular leisure activity among Canadians in 1975, Statistics Canada says.

In a survey for the secretary of state department, the statistics agency also found that more than one-quarter of the 32,000 people over 14 questioned in October, 1975, reported they did not read newspapers.

The leisure study released Friday is the second of its kind done for the department. It did not examine attendance at sports events and time spent on physical recreation.

Ninety-six per cent of those surveyed reported they watch television — 15 per cent for 30 hours or more each week, 44 per cent for between eight and 29 hours, and 37 per cent for between one and seven hours weekly.

Quebecers watch more television than anyone else, the survey indicates. Manitoba has the highest rate of non-viewers — at 7.9 per cent, nearly twice the national average.

Families in the upper-income brackets of $20,000 a year or more spent fewer hours watching television than families in lower-income groups, the survey found.

The secretary of state department said the survey, like the one conducted for it in 1972, "will be of interest to social scientists, planners and policy makers in fields such as arts and culture, recreation, leisure, product marketing and industrial development."

Newspapers were more popular than other parts of the print media. Nearly 40 per cent of those surveyed said they did not read books and 43 per cent said they did not read magazines.

Quebec, at 44 per cent, had the lowest book readership rate in the country; British Columbia at 67 per cent had the highest.

About 85 per cent of survey respondents said they listened to the radio, 43 per cent for less than eight hours weekly, 22 per cent for between eight and 29 hours, and eight per cent for more than 30 hours a week.

Nearly half those questioned said they spent between one and seven hours of their spare time each week listening to records, 15 per cent reported more than seven hours a week, and 38 per cent said they did not listen to records at all.

Nearly one of every three polled said they had a hobby, and 18 per cent said they engaged in some craft as a leisure activity.

Only eight per cent reported playing or practising music for between one and seven hours a week. Another three per cent spent eight or more hours weekly on their music.

Quebec stands out through high attendance at performing arts events — mainly popular music, theatre, dance, ballet, other live shows and arts or crafts festivals, the survey report says.

EARLY END OFFERED

PM Ready To Trade On Controls

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau offered business and labor a conditional early end to wage-and-price controls Friday, but representatives of the two key economic decision-making groups asked for another two to three weeks to respond to the government's proposal.

During a 4½-hour meeting, Trudeau and other cabinet ministers discussed with labor and business representatives three possible early dates for an end to the program: next Oct. 14, the second anniversary of controls; next Jan. 2 and Oct. 14, 1978.

Legislation implementing the controls is due to expire Dec. 31, 1978.

But Trudeau told a news conference that, in return for an early end to the program, labor and business would have to agree to three conditions.

The conditions are:

—An agreement from both sides to set up a consultative forum with government and other interests after controls end to discuss future directions for the economy;

—An agreement for the setting up of a monitoring agency which would not have authority to roll back excessive price and pay raises but which could question and publicize exceptional increases;

—Some commitment to voluntary restraint which would have the effect of creating pressure for reduced inflation.

Rather than responding immediately, the labor and business spokesmen, headed by Joe Morris, president of the Canadian Labor Congress, and A. J. de Grandpre, president of Bell Canada, asked for two to three weeks to talk over the federal proposals with their constituencies.

Morris said a meeting of the heads of the 115 unions affiliated with the CLC would be held. De Grandpre, speaking for the Business Council on National Issues—which includes the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Chamber of Commerce—said he would begin consultation with business leaders next week.

The request for more time will set back an expected announcement of the date for decontrol. Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said earlier this month that a date would probably be announced in the first week of August.

After the meeting, Macdonald said he hoped to be able to announce a date before Sept. 15.

Trudeau said if business and labor representatives could give a positive response to the government proposals, the government would be prepared to indicate a date. There would have to be "substantive" agreement on the three conditions.

He said next Oct. 14 as a decontrol date would be "very soon but still a possibility" and the beginning of January was another possibility.

But Trudeau added that he would not want to create any expectations until some agreement is reached.

Morris said he wanted clarification of some points in a government paper presented to the meeting before he met with leaders of the affiliated unions.

There was no mention in the paper of any specific wage limit, he said.

Asked if he thought the leaders of affiliates would accept the conditions, Morris said only that he had to check his mandate from the unions from time to time.

But he said he had "trouble fitting the idea of voluntary restraint within the concept of our society."

Trudeau told reporters the government would have to make commitments to spending restraint and similar pledges would have to be made by business and labor, which are jointly responsible with government for the economy.

AirWest Stays Up in Air

Five flight crews of management staff are trying to maintain AirWest Airlines service today after pilots walked off the job Friday to protest dismissal of a co-pilot.

The airline operates harbor-to-harbor flights between Victoria and Vancouver as well as a service between Victoria and Seattle among its schedules.

A spokesman said today no new reservations are being taken but ones already made are being honored and crews are trying to meet regular departure times.

Norm Franks, chief financial officer for the airline, said from Vancouver he expects dismissal of co-pilot Bruce Hughes will probably go to an arbitration hearing under terms of a labor contract.

Meanwhile, pilots among management are maintaining what he described as a "shuttle service," meaning flights depart as passengers show up.

About 30 pilots in Vancouver, along with 60 clerical and maintenance staff, went out on a study session after the dismissal of Hughes.

Wes Anderson, business agent for Local 213 of the Teamsters Union, which represents the company's 95 employees, said Hughes was fired when he failed a route check test. He said Hughes had only been on the job two weeks and wasn't properly trained to pass such a test.

The work stoppage on Friday affected flights between Vancouver and Victoria and Vancouver and Nanaimo. However, flights between Victoria and Seattle continued as usual.

Anderson said the study session will continue until all the captains instruct co-pilots on route checks, or until the chief pilot appears before the pilots and justifies the firing.

The union said the walkout isn't related to current efforts to get a contract. The last agreement expired Oct. 31, 1976.

Lang Hopeful

OTTAWA (FP) — Transport Minister Otto Lang says he remains "quietly optimistic" that a contract dispute with Canada's 2,200 air traffic controllers can be resolved without the strike action being threatened by the union.

The minister's statement yesterday came shortly after the Canadian Air Traffic Control Assoc. (CATCA) was authorized by its membership to launch a series of rotating strikes to back contract demands as of 11:59 p.m. EDT on Aug. 8.

"The talks will continue," Lang said in a telephone interview, "because I am sure both sides want to avoid the pain which such a strike would cause the public."

Woodward's Quiz Rapped

Labor Minister Allan Williams said Friday he will ask the provincial human rights branch to examine questionnaires faced by job applicants at Woodward's stores.

Rosemary Brown (NDP Vancouver Burrard) presented one of the questionnaires in the legislature and said it contained "61 of the most intimate medical questions it is possible to ask."

Some of the questions included:

"Do you have piles or hemorrhoids?"

"Have you ever had a locked or trick knee, shoulder or elbow?"

"Have you ever had pneumonia, rheumatic fever or St. Vitus Dance?"

"Have you ever been treated for genital problems?"

Other questions related to the job applicant's history of surgery, hay fever, skin trouble, sciatica, gout, eye trouble, coughing up blood, heart murmurs or albumin in the urine.

Brown said the form also requires details on the death of relatives, including what year they died, how old they were, cause of death and how long they were sick before they died.

"I couldn't get a job at Woodward's because I certainly couldn't answer half the questions," Brown told the legislature.

The questionnaire presented in the legislature was signed by N. R. Smith, a Woodward's project manager, who warns candidates, that the process could take up to six hours, including preliminary screening, in-depth interviews, medical-dental screening and an aptitude test battery.

Strata Owners Appeal

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Energy Commission has called a public hearing here Oct. 10 to consider allegations by a group of condominium owners that B.C. Hydro charges them discriminatory electricity rates.

Announcement of the hearing follows a complaint filed with the energy commission Feb. 21 by the Strata Plan Owners' Association of B.C., the province's largest organization of condominium owners.

The association says Hydro discriminates against strata title owners by charging them a higher electricity rate than it charges owners of single-family detached houses.

It says Hydro assesses house owners a residential rate which is lower than commercial rates.

The residential rate is levied on the electricity condominium owners use in private residences within a strata development but the higher, commercial rate is applied to electricity used for shared facilities like hallways, lobbies and garages.

The association, which represents 7,000 individual condominium owners involved in 120 separate strata developments, wants the Energy Commission to order Hydro to stop the alleged price discrimination policy and compensate condominium owners for past payment of the higher electricity fee.

Blaze Remains Threat

CORONA, Calif. (UPI) — A force of 900 firefighters fought back a brush fire "at the doorsteps" of suburban homes that were saved by an airdrop of water mixed with fire-retardant chemicals.

The fire, ignited Thursday by an illegal campfire, continued to burn out of control through Friday and into today over 3,000 acres of high brush in the canyons of the Cleveland National Forest, with erratic winds threatening to drive it into the city for a third time.

Firefighters, many of them rushed straight from the Santa Barbara disaster 160 miles to the north and going into their fifth day on the lines, got a break Friday night. Winds sank to 5 miles an hour, and the temperatures dropped.

"What we have now is a calm creeping fire" in the hills and canyons over the city, said U.S. Forest Service spokesman Tom Hoose.

He said the blaze was fueled by tall brush "more like trees" that has not burned since the Forest Service began keeping records in 1910.

Firelines contained only 20 per cent of the perimeter, leaving wide open stretches of flame that could blow back into the city's outskirts if the wind shifted, duplicating the Santa Barbara blaze that destroyed 234 homes.

Such a thrust Thursday forced evacuation of 25 homes that eventually were saved, and another sent flames racing to within 100 yards or less of the Village Grove housing development.

REVENUE EXCESSIVE

OTTAWA — A total of 530 companies have generated "excess revenue" since the start of the government's anti-inflation program, the Anti-Inflation Board disclosed Friday.

Excess revenue to date totals over $105,000,000 including $3.1 million generated by six insurance companies reviewed during the May 17 to June 30 period.

The board explained that "excess revenue" can result from a variety of factors. It is not in itself an indication that the company has contravened the Anti-Inflation Act.

It is however a situation which must be corrected if the firm is to comply with the anti-inflation program.

On the positive side the board said 91 per cent of Canadian companies reporting to the board are not generating excess revenue.

During the six-week period from May 17 to June 30 the board reviewed 864 company reports, of which 122 were for the first complaince period and 742 were for the second compliance period.

Of these, nine per cent were found to have excess revenue. This is somewhat lower than the percentage reported since the start of the program.

Sixty-nine additional companies accumulated $11,283,000 excess revenue. This raised to 530 the number that had generated excess revenue since the program's beginning.

The guidelines require firms to follow pricing policies which cover their allowable costs plus a percentage margin of profit that is limited by the guidelines. If the profit margin exceeds the guidelines during the complaince period "excess revenue" is generated and the company must submit a compliance plan for returning the money to the marketplace.

Most of the companies the board listed in its latest report had compliance plans under review by the board at the time of the announcement.

$2.9M Pricetag On Strathcona

The former Strathcona Lodge girls' school at Shawnigan Lake, including several adjacent parcels of land, is on the market for $2.9 million, a spokesman for the school's board of governors said Friday.

The 23-acre site includes four residences, each capable of handling 50 people, a dining hall, gymnasium, tennis courts, infirmary, administration offices, classrooms, and 500 feet of waterfront with docks and boats.

The school was closed this year after the governing board was told it would go into debt if it continued.

Terrence O'Grady, chairman of the board of governors, said the board hopes the school will continue to be used for educational purposes.

A system crossing the Coast today provided a dull start for this holiday weekend in most areas. As this system moves inland and dissipates a substantial ridge of high pressure will build over the province and provide more summerlike weather for the balance of the weekend.

An Excited Andrew Recalls His Northern Tour

EDMONTON (CP) — Prince Andrew, 17, ended his six-month Canadian stay so full of canoeing stories Friday that teenagers lunching with him said they were left high and dry.

Alberta's Lt.-Gov. Ralph Steinhauer said the queen's second son was "just full of his two-week trip" down the Coppermine River in the Northwest Territories.

Royal press secretary Bob Purcell said Prince Andrew was sorry to be leaving Canada and tipped the prince to have close links with the country in future.

Prince Andrew joined Lakefield College School in Ontario for two semesters in January, and then toured British Columbia and the Rocky Mountains, joining his brother Prince Charles in Calgary for the stampede.

He flew here from Yellowknife en route to London Friday and lunched with a group of teenagers at Fort Edmonton, an historic reconstruction of the city's first settlement.

"Prince Andrew told us the canoes went over several times in the Coppermine River and the party ended up swimming," said Shane MacLaughlin, 18.

"He made the trip sound very exciting and he obviously enjoyed every minute of it," said Sheri Chisan, 17, Steinhauer's grand-daughter.

Prince Andrew made the 300-mile trip — from Point Lake, 200 miles north of Yellowknife, to the Inuit settlement of Coppermine on the Arctic coast — with school friends and shared a 17-foot aluminum canoe with headmaster Terry Guest, 38.

Guest, who arrived here from Yellowknife with the prince, praised Prince Andrew's prowess at the bow.

"We only portaged three times on the whole trip," he said. "We ran all the big rapids except Bloody Falls."

Prince Andrew was in good form when he arrived from Yellowknife and told Steinhauer fishing stories, extending his arms as far as they would go.

"He's just like any other boy," said Madelaine Perrault, 18, another of the teenagers who lunched with him. "The way he talks makes you feel as if you have known him for years."

Stepping out into the rain after a roast beef lunch, Prince Andrew quipped: 'It's just like England. Typically raining."

Salmon Pact Priority

OTTAWA (CP) — Agreement by Canada and the United States to attach priority status to West Coast salmon talks could hasten a conclusion to negotiations under way for 10 years.

The salmon talks got new emphasis in the announcement this week that both countries had picked special negotiators to resolve maritime boundary, fishery and hydrocarbon resource matters.

Officials have been trying since 1967 to reach agreement on ways to balance the interception of each other's salmon by fishermen.

Canada says U.S. fishermen catch too much salmon heading into Canadian rivers to spawn. U.S. groups say Canadians get too much salmon bound for American spawning grounds.

Cliff Levelton, a senior fisheries department official who has headed Canadian salmon talk teams, said in an interview: "We're trying to get an equitable division of interceptions. In the long term, we would like to see them reduced."

Levelton said no decision has been made on resuming formal talks. But technical groups have been meeting.

Price Hikes Take a Dip

OTTAWA (CP) — Major companies that must gain permission of the anti-inflation board before they raise prices are — on average — asking for significantly lower price increases than a year ago, according to the board.

The board said in a news release the average price increase asked for by 342 major firms in the first six months of this year was four per cent, compared with 6.77 per cent in the similar period of 1976.

Under federal anti-inflation guides, the firms are required to give the board 30 days' notice in advance of important price increases. About $56 billion of sales a year are subject to the pre-notification requirements.

Que. Labor Bill Most Pro-Union

Proposed labor legislation unveiled by the Quebec government Friday would give that province's workers more rights than any others in Canada.

The law would ban the hiring of "scabs" during legal walkouts — something no other province does.

British Columbia outlaws the use of "professional strike breakers" hired to disrupt picket lines, but it does not prevent the hiring of other employees to maintain production.

Under the Quebec law, all workers hired within 90 days of a strike would be bound to obey any strike call.

The amendment to the province's Labor Code would also guarantee workers the right to their old jobs after a strike.

If a newly-certified union and an employer failed to agree on the terms of a first contract, a conciliator could impose a one-year contract.

Under the amendments, either labor or management may ask for conciliation within 90 days of the end of a contract, and after the 90-day period the workers may strike legally.

Pierre Marois, social development minister, told a news conference the amendments were the first step toward a healthy labor relations climate, adding that good labor relations were necessary for economic development.

Most Quebecers are "fed up with the violence" that has characterized labor relations in the province, he said, and the government was trying to get rid of the most flagrant abuses which lead to violence.

The use of strikebreakers provoked violence last week at the Robin Hood Multifoods Ltd. flour mill in Montreal where eight pickets were shot.

Although the Robin Hood mill comes under federal jurisdiction, several other labor conflicts — like the 20 month dispute at Montreal's United Aircraft plant — have led to violence over the use of scabs.

Labor Minister Pierre-Marc Johnson said the ban on strikebreakers will "restore a balance to labor relations. We cannot allow an employer to do anything he wants during a labor conflict."

Johnson said the use of strikebreakers and the violence which often ensues have a demoralizing effect on workers and lower their productivity when they return to their jobs.

Business leaders have been quick to condemn the bill.

Ghislain Dufour, executive director of the Ronseil du Patronat du Quebec, the province's largest employer association, said the conseil is asking the government to hold hearings on the bill.

Dufour said in a statement the bill was very important because of its new orientation and should not have been introduced when another important bill, the French Language Charter, was still in the legislative process.

Jim Doyle, president of the Quebec Chamber of Commerce said about the announcement that there would be no hearings on the bill: "That's democracy in action, I'll say."

But he termed "acceptable" the Rand Formula clause of the bill which provides for payment of dues by all members of a bargaining unit whether they are union members or not.

However, a clause prohibiting employers from using strikebreakers was a "one-sided set of rules.

PENSIONER JAILED

TORONTO (CP) — An 87 year-old pensioner started serving a 60-day sentence in Orangeville county jail Friday for non-payment of a $2,500 fine.

Hhe finished it the same day when he was releaseo on an appeal.

A spokesman for the ministry of correctional services said Matthew James Varey of Mono Township was arrested by provincial police Thursday at his home.

The spokesman said Varey was fined June 16 for breaking township bylaws concerning the keeping of dog kennels.

28-Hour Week Provided In Contract

VANCOUVER (CP) — A contract providing for an average work week of 28 hours has been signed between the Vancouver Resources Board and the Service, Office and Retail Workers' Union of Canada.

The new contract is scheduled to run from Aug. 1, 1977, to July 31, 1978, despite a proposal before the British Columbia legislature to disband the board.

The one-year agreement covers 10 permanent and 10 part-time workers employed at Vancouver's Transition House, a refuge for women in crisis.

Pat Barter, a union spokesman, said the 28-hour work week was the "most significant gain" in the new contract.

The contract also provides for a 6.18 per cent wage increase, rqising rates to $7.42 an hour from $6.99.

CAN'T TELL PROFIT BREAK, MAJOR U.S. OIL FIRMS SAY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Major petroleum companies said Friday they do not know how much money their production, refining and marketing divisions make or lose individually, but only know the net earnings of the entire company.

Officials of the Federal Energy Administration, in a committee discussion on FEA proposals for detailed petroleum company financial reporting, displayed some skepticism of those claims.

And a spokesman for independent gasoline marketers said that the finances of individual segments of the petroleum industry could be calculated "down to the last one-hundredth of a cent."

The discussion skimmed over one of the most ticklish problems in the development of national energy policy—the clash between the government's need to know what goes on isside the industry, and the industry's desire to defend what it considers to be confidential business secrets.

Phil Blamey, controller of Union Oil Co., Dean Bloyd, vice-president of Tesoro Petroleum Corp., Ted Dow, deputy controller of Standard Oil Co. of California and H. H. Hinkle, assistant controller of Mobil Oil, all said their companies could not figure out separate profit-loss accounts for their different operations.

FEA Deputy Administrator David Bardin and David Hulett, deputy assistant administrator for energy information and analysis, expressed skepticism. They asked how the companies make decisions to invest in refineries, wells or marketing outlets if they can't tell whether these facilities will be profitable.

The company spokesmen said investment decisions were based on general cost reduction and marketing strategies, not individual profit calculations.

J. O. Edwards, controller of Exxon Co., U.S.A., said his company does, in fact, manage its business by monitoring costs and revenues in separate "profit centres," but does not consider such calculations accurate enough to provide a basis of government policies and actions.

The companies' position, however, was challenged by Jack Blum, executive director of the Independent Gasoline Marketers Council. Blum said marketers can at least calculate their own profit margins, per gallon, to within one-hundredth of a cent as could the larger companies if they wanted to.

The FEA has had congressional authority for almost three years to collect financial information from the petroleum companies, but is just now proposing a reporting form.

Chilling Conclusions

Task Force on Human Life is the bitterly ironic title of an Anglican Church of Canada report which suggests that severely retarded infants should not be treated as human beings and should perhaps be killed at birth.

It is a paper prepared by 11 members of the church who are doctors, lawyers, theologians, nurses for presentation in August at a meeting of the church's leadership in Calgary. Despite all the qualifying factors hedged about the paper, it is a sad and chilling document.

No matter that it was prepared by a group of professionals and laymen active in the Anglican Church of Canada after much discussion and thought. Or that it is actually just a position paper and represents not the church's policy but only the opinions of the 11 men and women who signed it.

Or that the participants complained later that it was intended only for the eyes of the 300-member Anglican Synod, which consists of the church's bishops and clergy and elected lay representatives. And that some of the authors complained of press sensationalism and distortion regarding the paper.

The subject of the paper and the conclusions drawn by the writers hardly require yellow journalism to draw attention to the matter. The comments of the physician who edited the paper, Dr. Laurence Whitehead of Winnipeg, in an interview with The Globe and Mail which disclosed the existence of the paper, reveal a startling state of mind.

He said severely retarded children "are like family pets — cats or dogs — the kindest thing for that child is to end its life . . . within days of its birth. If you have an injured animal, the most humane thing to do to that dog would be to kill it, wouldn't it?

"True, advances have been made in treating them but you know, I want to know what value that individual has to itself and to society in general . . . You can train an animal to do things . . . I don't know whether that benefits the dog or the horse."

These are human beings he is speaking of, human beings however "abnormal." Equating them with mere animals negates civilization. Man is different from animals. Unlike dogs in the wild, man cares for the weaker and less able. That is what sets him apart from animals unchanged in millenia, who recognize only the survival of the strong.

The merest suggestion that such a code be applied to human conduct is sinister, and ought to arouse loud outcries. One hesitates to make comparisons with such a shocking proposal, but it echoes the utilitarian solutions of totalitarian states — "terminate" the retarded, the elderly, the crippled.

It is a fearsome thing the 11 authors of the report suggest.

Bag It

A blow for consumer freedom has been struck, albeit a small one, by two independent dairies in the Okanagan who are refusing to conform to the industry-wide decision to switch to floppy plastic bag milk containers.

The customers of Dutch Dairy and NOCA don't like the bags, the two firms have found, so they are flouting the B.C. dairy industry and keeping the good old cartons.

The four one-litre bags packaged in a larger plastic bag may resemble nature's first and best milk container — the cow's udder — more closely than a bottle or cardboard carton, but as a means of transferring milk from cow to consumer it is about as useful as pulling on Betsy's teat and aiming for one's mouth.

Our entirely unscientific survey (consisting of looking in shopping buggies at the supermarket) shows that people are not switching to the "bladder pack."

They dislike the unwieldy, sloppy things. With a carton, one peels back the spout and that's it. The milk bag has to be plumped nicely into its special ovoid pitcher, its corner snipped just so at a 45-degree angle, and still milk dribbles down inside between the bag and the pitcher. Could the average eight-year-old do all this? Could the average brain surgeon?

There's aesthetics too. The milk bag pack in the refrigerator looks like an unmade bed. It wallows like a hippopotamus. Cartons stand up straight in a corner and take up less space. Empty cartons are good for all kinds of things. Fire starters. Boats for the kids. Paint pots. Plant containers. What's a plastic envelope with a corner cut off good for?

Fie on the bulgy bags. Keep the cartons.

'Pathologically Paranoid?' More Info Would Help

In one of the less graceful backflips of the season, Prime Minister Trudeau set out a couple of days ago to reassure Canada's news media that he really wasn't about to impose any kind of controls on them. He stated that he wouldn't know how to go about controlling the media even if he wanted to, and anyway the media were promoting national unity to the best of their ability.

It was a far cry from remarks Trudeau was making just a week earlier when he was maintaining that a report from the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) supported his fears of separatists under every media bed, and that if the media didn't discipline themselves more "discipline has to be imposed upon them, which nobody likes."

Give Trudeau credit for some intelligence in his flip-flop stand. On thinking the matter over, he clearly reached the obvious conclusion that it's a lot easier to complain about the press than to do anything about it within the principles of the democratic system.

But sorry, Mr. Prime Minister, we are not reassured. Even in the latest round of explanations, it doesn't sound as if the basic thinking of the government has changed much; it's just that everyone realizes controls wouldn't be practical or politically acceptable.

Trudeau says those of us who interpret his statements this way are suffering from "pathological paranoia." He says he never meant anything more by his discipline statement than that a press council would be "a great idea." It seems that he is suffering from a desire to rewrite history.

It should be understood that the concerns of the media do not come from the prime minister's complaints about the press. No one is more aware of the news industry's shortcomings than those who work in it.

Like all other private industries, newspapers and broadcasters grapple with problems of scarce resources, of conflicting priorities, of lack of time and space. They wrestle also with problems unique to the news industry — problems of accuracy, of fairness, of good taste.

Sometimes the answers turn out right, and the media live up to any shimmering ideal of how the public should be informed. Other times the answers turn out wrong, and the industry is guilty of sins of omission, of carelessness, even of bias. More often, the end result is somewhere between the two extremes.

Undoubtedly everyone in Canada — those working in the media, those in government, ordinary citizens — would like to see the press come closer to the ideal more often. But it is immensely difficult for the system to find any ways of helping them do that.

Politicians are fond of saying that the media now are among the least controlled of all industries, particularly for the amount of power they wield. This is surely an exaggeration. Current Canadian law places a basic set of controls on all media, print and broadcast.

The laws of libel prevent publication or broadcast of false information that harms a person's reputation, whether it is made public maliciously or carelessly.

Laws of contempt of court exist to ensure the press does not prevent anyone from getting a fair trial and laws against obscenity and pornography keep them within some minimal bounds, at least, of good taste.

What more can the government and the lawmakers do without infringing on the dangerous areas of freedom of speech or perpetration of propaganda? Very little, it would seem.

To insist on the publication of certain information or to prohibit the publication of other views would lead us directly into a police state, a concept that is horrendous philosophically, morally and politically. To have the government set up a press council would inevitably lead to charges of political interference with free speech. Even to pass some law as simple as the equal time rule in effect in the U.S. would lead to a mass of practical problems — equal time for whom? Does one have to give as much time to the North American Labor Party as to the Liberals just because they're both running candidates in an election?

Yet there is a way the government — any government, federal, provincial or municipal — can improve the press's performance. It is a remarkably simple way, as the few politicians who have ever tried it have discovered.

It consists of making available to the press the information it needs to do its job.

If the press doesn't have to spend hours on end arguing with four civil servants to obtain every twiddly piece of data it needs, it will have far more time to devote to examining the major problems afflicting the country.

If it easily obtains the information it needs about a difficult situation, it is much less likely to believe that a coverup is going on.

If it had a Freedom of Information Act it could use when it needed to, it wouldn't be so obsessed with leaks and confidential reports.

Try it some time, Mr. Prime Minister. It'll work far better than any control program you could ever invent. — B.McL.

RICHARD GWYN

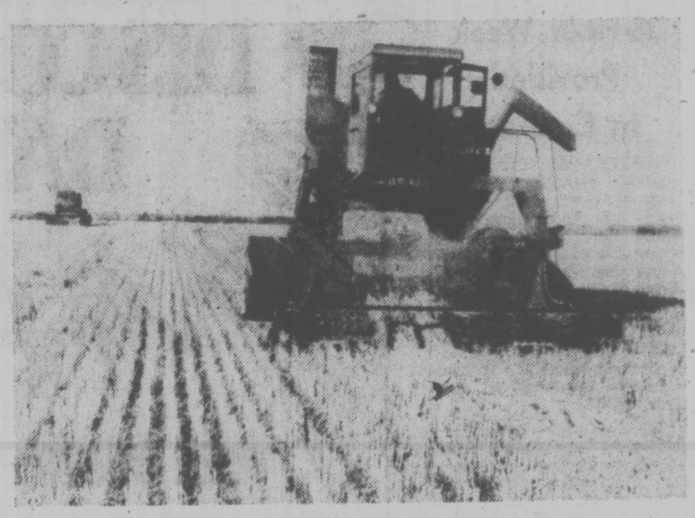
A New Wheat Cartel?

OTTAWA — In the Winnipeg office of Larry Kristianson, assistant chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, hangs a framed cartoon of a farmer standing beside his son in the midst of a knee-high crop of wheat, and saying: "One day all this will be yours. Provided it rains, and there isn't too much sun, and the grasshoppers don't come, and the trains arrive, and there isn't a grain handlers' strike . . ."

And on and on, in the familiar litany of everything that can happen to wheat between seed and sale.

With wheat, if it isn't one thing it's another. In my files there are three-month old clips with headlines like Dustbowl Drought Threatens. The headline of an article that I cut out last week read: Wheat Glut Threatens.

The rains came, in May and June, which is when it counts. Although southern Alberta and parts of southern Saskatchewan still, are dry, the prairies are headed for a near-bumper crop of 650 million bushels of wheat. Provided, of course, that the grasshoppers don't come, and the trains do, and the grain handlers don't go on strike.



There's a wheat glut, prices are down. Lang wants a "wheat OPEC."

Rains Came

That's great. Not if you know anything about wheat. The problem is that the rains have come also in the United States, in Argentina, in Australia, in Soviet Russia, and even in India. Export prices quoted for Thunder Bay elevators are down to $3.10 a bushel for top-quality, high-protein wheat, compared to $4.60 a bushel a year ago and to almost $6 a bushel three years ago.

The spectre of global starvation, which inspired the World Food Conference in Rome in 1974, has disappeared. By next year, world stocks of grain will have soared to 205 million tons, almost double the level of just two years ago.

So we all now can relax? Quite the contrary. The principal cause of the last wheat crisis was that the U.S. government, during the low-price, high-production years of 1970-71, subsidized its grain farmers to take 60 million acres out of production. In Canada, a comparable program called LIFT turned 10 million acres to fallow. When the rains didn't come in 1973-74, there were no reserves of wheat to feed the hungry. Now the cycle seems to be repeating itself. Nothing has been done about the Rome conference resolution which called for a world food bank. U.S. Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland has announced he will introduce acreage restrictions in the coming crop year.

Less wheat will be grown next year, therefore. Reserves will dwindle, prices will climb, and just one year's bad harvest will turn the world hungry again.

Maybe not. Transport Minister Otto Lang is within touching distance of the Holy Grail he's been pursuing during the eight years that he's been responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, carrying that job like an icon with him from portfolio to portfolio.

Lang's vision is an international wheat agreement. Wheat exporters would do for their product roughly what the Arabs have done for oil.

Minimum prices, to benefit the wheat producers, and maximum prices to benefit the wheat consumers, would be the foundation for the agreement. Onto that foundation would be built a system for stockpiling reserves.

"The world isn't operating on fat supplies of wheat by any means," says Lang. "But there's no way more of it will get stockpiled until consumers give us credit for carrying those reserves."

Today, Canadian and American farmers, as well as those in Australia, Argentina, France and Soviet Russia (these last two countries export as well as import wheat) pay the carrying charges on wheat stored in their bins or in elevators at export terminals like Thunder Bay. Tomorrow, if Lang has his way, consuming countries will pay a part of the storage costs as insurance premiums for a world grain bank they can draw on when bad harvests — which are bound to happen — next exhaust conventional wheat supplies.

Not New

The idea for an international wheat agreement isn't new. Its time may now have come because Bergland, unlike his predecessor Earl Butz, believes in it. Other wheat exporters, like Australia, are on side. Wheat importers, like Japan, are on the sidelines, interested but cautious. If necessary, the U.S. and Canada, which account for 75 per cent of wheat exports, could go it alone. "That's a fallback position," says Lang, "but I'm certain we can sell the consuming countries on the benefits of security of supply."

Sometime next spring the 60-member International Wheat Council will meet in London to negotiate an international wheat agreement. The sessions promise to be as difficult as those of the United Nations Law of the Sea conferences.

Lang, though, is supremely confident. "I'm absolutely certain we can get an agreement by the next crop year (August 1, 1978)," he says. To demonstrate his confidence. Lang isn't asking farmers to cut back production for next year. If his optimism proves well founded all that Canadian grain growers will have to worry about will be grasshoppers and grain handlers.

Mess Still Here

Let's take a look back over the last few years in the government of B.C. In 1972, a bombshell hit our Social Credit party. After 20 years, W. A. C. Bennett was defeated by that little Dave Barrett and his party. From that day on, it soon became clear that the Socreds would use every trick in the book to regain their hold on B.C. This they did in December 1975 after spending many thousands of dollars, in addition to smearing a party that was creating a great deal of confidence and trust among the working classes of B.C. Now for the last 18 months, we have heard of all the bad things the NDP did while in power, but very little of the good done for those in need.

Mr. Bennett declared in his election campaign: "Lets clear up the mess."

What have we got so far? Unemployment one of the highest in Canada; tourist business declining; many small businesses in the red; people leaving the province to find work; the total indifference of this government to such troubles in industry (example, the Railwest boxcar plant in Squamish); and the rising prices making this province one of the most expensive to live in. In spite of this we have those arrogant ministers in government painting us a rosy picture of the economy, while people are having a hard time (especially those on fixed incomes) to live. Huge surpluses have been made at the expense of some very fine social aid programs initiated by the former government, and now cut back and some scrapped. Much has been done for the benefit of the big corporations and big businessmen, but very little for the ordinary man in the street.

Granted the NDP did go overboard in their short stay in office, but a lot of good things were done for the people of B.C. in that period. Had the people of this province returned them to power, we would have seen a great cut in government spending, a more serious yet humane government, more people working, more job opportunities for our younger people, and generally a happier people here in B.C., with far more visitors coming enjoying our wonderful province. We have and are very fortunate in having such a hard working opposition which keeps the people of this province well informed of some very shady happenings in our government. Let's not forget this when they appeal again for our votes. — Griff Owens, 949 Dunn Avenue.

New Policy

When requested, the Victoria Times withholds the names and addresses of letters to the editor. However, we believe that persons who wish to express an opinion, particularly one of a critical nature, should be prepared to put their names to it. Consequently a new policy will take effect August 1:

As of that date, the Times will not publish letters with a nom-de-plume unless the writer can offer a good reason for not printing his name. Addresses will still be withheld on request.

The Times also reminds readers that it retains the right to edit letters for brevity, grammar and obscenity and urges that they not exceed 300 words. The shorter they are, the more likely they are to be printed in their entirety.

Royally Done

I am sure I am expressing the feelings of tens of thousands of Canadians when I write to publicly thank the CBC for bringing us the most interesting and instructive program Royal Heritage. The technical perfection, both visual and audio, was excellent.

Last Thursday's program — the final in the series — reminded me once again how fortunate we are to have this truly remarkable and splendid family, by constitution, as our "first family" (to use the American expression). Also to have such a devoted and glorious lady as Elizabeth the Second as our queen and head of state in Canada.

In these trying times of threatened national disunity it is fortunate indeed to have an ideal to look up to and an example of steadfastness and devotion to duty to admire and hopefully to bring inspriation and worthy example to our daily lives. — G.M. Terry, 3237 Service Street.

Independence

Although I am a strong supporter of the NDP, I do not agree with the writer of the letter Incredible (July 25).

I will be quite frank when I say that, after the departure of George Oake, I expected that the two Victoria newspapers would voice a single point of view, but I have found that the editorials, under your new editor, have shown a very strong independence for which I am thankful. It would be difficult if not impossible to agree with every editorial one reads but, in general, I feel that our new editor has shown a very credible independence.

In my view the NDP is still in kindergarten when it comes to patronage; they have do much to learn from the other parties both provincial and federal. It is a tragic fact that patronage is accepted by the Canadian people as a fact of life and no one seems to worry when any good Liberal who serves the party for some year is assured a future without financial or other worries. The recent exposures of Socred appointments also confirms that it pays to be a good Socred. Until the people awake from their slumber and endeavor to bring decency into our governments on all three levels we will continue to be afflicted by this very obnoxious disease. — M.P.B. California Dream Turns Sour

By LOU CANNON

LOS ANGELES — At Monterey Bay commercial salmon fishermen return disconsolately with empty nets. A hundred miles south on the California coast the freshwater table has sunk so far below sea level that town wells have been invaded by salt water. On a Los Angeles patio a swarm of voracious ants envelops a scrap of bone discarded by the family dog. On the Great Plains the thin soil cover is ripped away by swirling wind spouts reminiscent of the Dust Bowl.

"The heart of the West is a desert, unqualified and absolute," the late Walter Prescott Webb wrote two decades ago in an article that was derided by Westerners who thought they had conquered their environment.

Desert is Closing in

Now the supposedly vanquished forces of nature have arisen, and the desert is closing in. Even Californians, long the most favored of Westerners, are beginning to suspect that the good life may be going, going, gone.

It is a suspicion that does not prevent three of four Californians surveyed by pollster Mervin Field from saying that California remains "one of the best" places to live. But a popular gas company billboard in Southern California conveys another message. Across the picture of a man showering, the billboard urges: "Sing shorter songs."

For a returning Westerner who spent seven years in what he used to think of as the effete East, this billboard is a disquieting sign of diminished expectations.

Westerners, even more than other Americans, always thought of themselves as a people who could do anything. The example favored in Western textbooks and in Western schools was of the Mormons, who literally made the desert bloom in the arid flatlands around the Great Salt Lake.

Those who did not make the desert bloom, like the Indians who tried to live with it, were always suspect in the West. "Develop and conquer" might well have been the motto of the region.

Both the development impulse and the optimism about the good life were strongest in California, where, in the words of Carey McWilliams, "the lights went on all at once, in a blaze, and they have never been dimmed."

Now the optimism has been diminished by reality, and the development has been slowed down by events.

Along the California coastline building of all sorts has been brought to a near-standstill by the California Coastal Commissions created by vote of the people in 1972.

A real estate saleswoman, explaining the location of various homesites to a prospective buyer in a California coastal town, says matter-of-factly, "I assume you don't want to build before 1986 at the earliest." The would-be buyer stares at her in disbelief and walks out of the office. As a true Californian, he wants to build immediately.

There are other harbingers for the returning Westerner, other signs that the land may have reached its limit:

• California's most important industry is agriculture. Last year the state's farmers planted 6.6 million acres of crops with a total value of $2.6 billion. This is less than a one per cent increase in two years, but pesticides used on this land to maintain this high standard of production have increased 75 per cent during the same period — to a total of 83 million pounds of pesticides in 1976.

• The small towns and cities throughout the mountain West are steadily losing population, even their chambers of commerce now concede. But billboards en route to the Grand Canyon still advertise "Desert Land Cheap." Recently all the national forests in Arizona and New Mexico were closed because of extreme fire danger that could last to the end of the year or beyond.

• In Las Vegas a weary driver arrived without a reservation at a hotel on the Strip ususally booked full at this time of year. "Do you have any rooms?" he asked. "All the rooms you want," replied the desk clerk. "I don't know what's happened to the people."

• Lake Shasta, largest reservoir in California and the most important source of water for the agricultural economy, is less than one-quarter full. The lake has dropped 172 feet and no longer possesses sufficient cold water to save the salmon spawning run this fall. Oroville Reservoir, the state's second largest, is one-third full and has dropped by 200 feet. Unless the drought cycle ends this winter, Oroville may go dry next spring.

Farms Out of Water

Late in the 19th Century an Irishman by the name of Tiffin Patrick Cannon left Sacramento because of the floods that then recurred regularly there. He settled on a farm 40 miles away, above a bend in the American River known as Salmon Falls. Three-quarters of a century later Salmon Falls was flooded deliberately to create Folsom Lake and help prevent flooding in the Sacramento area.

Tiffin Patrick Cannon was my grandfather. Today several acres of his one-time farm are out of water again as Folsom Lake steadily retreats from what used to be its shoreline.

What has happened in California is more than a drought. It is a change in the fundamental mind-set of a people who acted as if they believed that the supply of water, energy, shoreline, fish, wildlife, crops and forests was inexhaustible.

In past years Californians always talked about WHEN something would happen (when we get this development going, when we build this dam, when this freeway goes through). Now, the word is "if," not "when." And the big "if" concerns the water supply and the energy and fuel supply after 1977.

There are those who say that there is nothing to worry about, who point out that the state recovered from a severe drought in the 1930s.

The comparison does not stand up. California's present population of 21.5 million is four times the state's population in the mid-'30s, and Californians suffered from the ravages of the Dust Bowl migration and the Depression until the Second World War.

This time the damages to the land, and to the economy, could prove beyond repair.

Even a winter's long rainfall would not restore the expectations of ever-expanding progress that used to prevail. That expectation was a sort of guns-and-butter attitude that the West could have all the development it wanted, set aside all the beach and parkland it needed, use all the water it desired.

In the late 1960s, for instance, conservationists within the administration of Gov. Ronald Reagan were able to persuade Reagan to support and sign legislation preserving California's remaining wild rivers. Now a bill that would remove many of the protections is moving with bipartisan support through the California legislature.

In one sense the environmentalists should be the heroes of the hour. After all, it was they who warned about future scarcities and about the costly waste of endless freeways and urban sprawl. Mostly, it was conservationists who talked about the foolishness of building recreational communities in second-growth forests around artificial lakes where the water supply could not be sustained.

Instead, the environmentalists are villains. Partly, this is because of a lingering Western conviction that development is the solution as well as the problem. Partly, it is because the environmental movement crested early in California, and environmentalists hold important positions in state and local administrations here.

Some Californians hold them responsible simply because they are in office, but are as powerless as anyone else to stave off natural disaster.

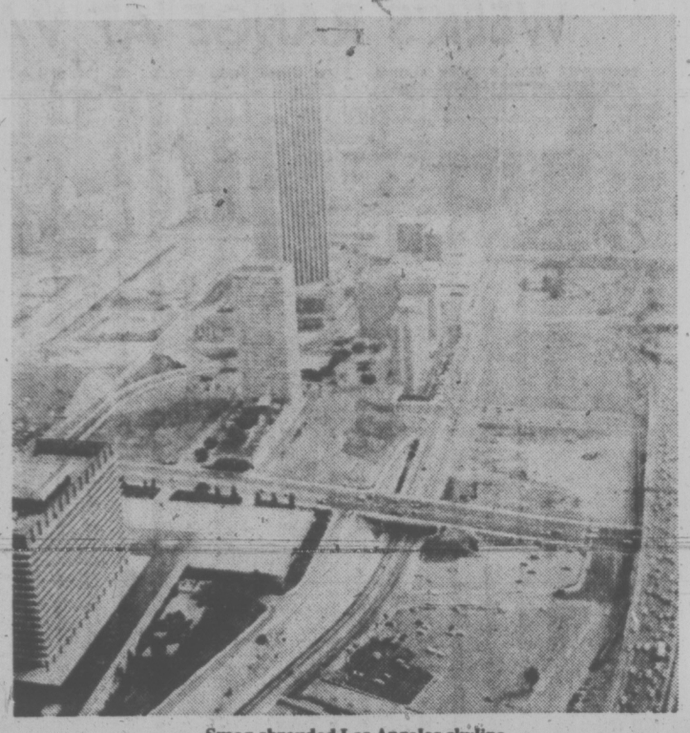
At the same time the scapegoating of conservationists has been enhanced by their growing alienation from one-time allies in the labor movement.

John Henning, president of the California Labor Federation, says that many environmentalists are "cultists" who will bring "absolute death and destruction to the economic growth and future of this state."

The AFL-CIO lobbyists in Sacramento have worked with industry to kill legislative attempts to emulate Oregon's law banning throwaway containers. A group called the Council on Economic and Environmental Balance has united big labor and big business in a mutual push for development.

Many Californians just seem confused about the possible solutions to their problems, as does their government. As a recent article in the conservationist magazine Cry California puts it:

"The governor's office, at the moment, is working on energy and resource-conserving appropriate technologies and simultaneously figuring out how to bring energy and resource-wasting heavy industry to California. The legislature is considering agricultural-lands preservation bills and at the same time perpetuating the transportation policies that encourage urban sprawl."



Smog-shrouded Los Angeles skyline

This schizophrenia is even more pronounced in water policy. Recently, a number of Northern California communities ended or curtailed water rationing, because water users had cut back so much that the water districts were losing revenue.

In Los Angeles the experts anticipate that a mandatory 10 per cent water cutback now in effect won't save anything, because city residents already have voluntarily made a 20 per cent water-use reduction.

Burst of Hedonism

While everyone sings shorter shower songs, southern Californians otherwise are responding to the crisis with a burst of hedonism reminiscent of a sailor's last fling ashore.

Big cars are selling briskly in Los Angeles, even with the strict air-pollution controls required in California, and the 55-mile-an-hour speed limit is a bad joke. On the Los Angeles freeways the speeding motorists are aided by radio traffic tie-up reports from helicopter pilot Gary Francis Powers of U-2 fame.

The big fad in California now is vans, campers, jeeps and a variety of front-drive and off-road vehicles. Car washes are closed through much of the West (a sign on a car wash in Boulder City, Nev., near Lake Mead, says, "No Water, No Wash") but they are doing a lively business in Los Angeles. One prominent car wash, open until 9 p.m. every night, closes only on Wednesday, which it proclaims as "C-day," announcing. "We're doing our bit for conservation."

It would be wrong to say that the returning Westerner finds everything changed for the worse. Lake Tahoe is no longer the crystal pool of boyhood memory, but it is less polluted than it was in the late 1960s, before rudimentary interstate pollution controls were enforced.

There are fewer Western rivers that have water in them, but many of these flow clearer than they once did. Rainbow trout are fished out of the Truckee River by the creelfull in downtown Reno. The sewage-caused stench that once permeated the eastern shore of San Francisco Bay has been cleaned up.

These are welcome signs of environmental progress in a time of drought and scarcity.

They are welcome signs, but they are not enough. In Los Angeles a radio station now offers the prize of a weekend in Detroit. The fishing boats return empty to Monterey Bay. In the land where Tiffin Patrick Cannon lies buried, an hour's drive from Sacramento, only the cemetery is green.

"The overriding influence that shapes the West is the desert," Walter Prescott Webb wrote prophetically in 1957. "That is its one unifying force. It permeates the plains, climbs to all but the highest mountain peaks, dwells continually in the valleys. The desert is the guest that came to dinner, never to go away."

A Case for Compulsory Retirement

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

As Maine goes, so goes the nation . . . which is all the more reason for Maine to go carefully. That state has just passed a bill declaring, in effect, that there is no such thing as retirement age for civil servants.

It might seem that legislation which says age alone is no longer sufficient reason to make a public employee retire strikes a blow against discrimination by age and that this is all to the good. But there are persuasive arguments on both sides of this issue — more than the 29-to-1 vote would suggest.

It's easy enough for most of us to pick instances of bright, energetic, conscientious people who were forced, on reaching 65 or some other arbitrarily chosen age, to go home and vegetate. Sheer stupidity to insist on applying the rule, we complain. Not only is his value lost to the company; we may have killed his chief interest in life.

Somehow, it is not so easy to assemble the other side of the argument — that the employee's capacities are often in serious decline, that the health of the company requires space for eager people in their prime, or that retirement may open up unsuspected vistas and interests for the employee.

The arbitrary line, appliable to all, relieves the employer of the unhappy task of selecting those who will stay and those who must go. Is Maine's plan really kinder?

High-Rise Nests Thwart Cowbird

A friend of mine told me the other day about a Barn Swallow's nest he'd seen that must have been 10 or 12 inches from top to bottom.

From the details I managed to glean about the nest, it was in a protected spot — a rafter or something, I forget now — and therefore not subject to such destructive elements as the weather. The nest had also been in place for several years — three at least — and its great height was the result of successive swallow nests being built one on top of the other.

Such multi-storied nests are not unusual. They rely for their existence on two essentials: sound construction and a protected site. And when a Barn Swallow finds a site that is protected enough to preserve a nest — or most of it — over winter, that Barn Swallow knows it has found a good thing and promptly uses the site again.

There is another element that should not be ignored in this multi-storied nest equation and that, for want of a better phrase, might be called territorial loyalty, the thing that brings the same bird back to the same little plot of ground to nest for as long as it lives or for as long as the spot retains what made it attractive in the first place.

Not only will the same bird come back but, if it's a female, she'll likely choose the same nesting spot.

But multi-storied nests aren't restricted to those that are built well enough and located securely enough to survive a northern winter; there's one type that is the result of one season's effort.

For this one we must turn to a bird we've branded as a rather unsavory character, one who relies on other birds to meet its responsibilities — the Brown-headed Cowbird, the cowbird for short.

The cowbird doesn't build a nest; it lays its eggs in other bird's nests and lets them raise its young. Usually the birds chosen for such responsibilities — and there is good evidence to support the idea that individual female cowbirds are very discriminating about where they lay their eggs — are smaller than the cowbird. Species such as small sparrows, vireos and warblers are favorite choices.

For the most part, those imposed upon either abandon their nest or suffer the invasion at the expense of their own young. Not so the Yellow Warbler.

Which brings us, finally, back to multi-storied nests again.

Yellow Warblers have apparently suffered the impositions of the cowbird long enough to have evolved a subtle, but effective, way of handling the problem. Instead of incubating the cowbird egg, hatching it and ultimately fledging the young, some Yellow Warblers literally build around the problem. And if the problem returns, they'll build around it again.

The result can be a startling affair, a nest of several storeys, each containing a combination of eggs that always includes cowbird's eggs but sometimes also includes the eggs of Yellow Warblers.

I can find no recent reference to the nest I'm now going to tell you about but I've got a clear picture in my mind of once seeing a photograph of an eleven-storey Yellow Warbler's nest — each storey with one or more cowbird's eggs in it; quite an accomplishment for one season.

★ ★ ★

Of more recent vintage, and somewhat better documentation, is a three-storey warbler's nest that contained, on level one, one cowbird's egg; on level two, two cowbird's eggs; and, on level three, nothing! Neither the warbler nor the cowbirds had got to that level yet.

The method used by the warblers to outsmart the cowbirds is beautifully simple — they just weave more nest material into the floor of the nest, gradually burying the offending eggs. But after raising the floor of the nest, they must raise the sides as well to maintain its proper proportions.

It is surprising that no other birds have been able to emulate the Yellow Warbler, which suggests that the cowbird problem, for most of these birds, may be comparatively new. But, give 'em time.

As for big Barn Swallow's nests, 10" is about as high as I've ever heard of. Can anybody top 10"?

U.S. to Control PBBs

WASHINGTON (WP) — U.S. Environmental Protection Agency administrator Douglas Costle Friday ordered development of strict controls on production of PBBs, the chemicals that caused the death or destruction of thousands of Michigan farm animals.

Costle, told agency officials to write regulations that could severely limit or even ban the manufacturing of the highly poisonous fire retardants, sources said.

His action comes a month after EPA announced finding PBB (polybrominated biphenyl), residues in plant, fish, soil, water and human hair in the area of three New York and New Jersey manufacturing plants.

White Pass

The White Pass and Yukon Corp. Ltd. reports net earnings of $567,000 or 22 cents a share for the first six months of 1977, compared with $507,000 or 17 cents a share for the comparable period in 1976. The company said that capital expenditures were $1,927,000 for the period while long-term debt was reduced by $210,000. Working capital was increased by $382,000. The combination of a mild winter and production problems on the part of customers adversely affected petroleum and transporation revenues, consequently lowering net earnings, a spokesman said.

Capital Div.

Capital Diversified Industries Ltd., of London, Ont., has acquired all outstanding shares of Action Traders Canada Ltd., Montreal, and its subsidiary companies. Action Traders, importer and distributor of skiing equipment and other winter items, has distribution centres in Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg, Toronto and Moncton, N.B. It also manufactures some hockey equipment and golf and sport bags. Capital says it expects its sales and revenues this year will be more than $22 million, with pre-tax profits of about $2 million, compared with a net profit of $482,261 on sales of $12 million in 1976. Capital operates Frontier Acceptance and Red Barn outlets in Ontario and Quebec and Chicken Delight franchises in the United States.

Carma

A special resolution increasing authorized capital of Carma Developers Ltd., has been passed by shareholders of Carma Developers Ltd. The authorized capital will be increased by $40 million, divided into 2 million first-preferred shares of par value of $20 each. The previously authorized capital consisted of six million Class A and six million Class B shares without nominal or par value.

Mace

Mace Technology Inc. has acquired assets, staff and technology of National Computer Systems Inc. of Houston.

A new Texas corporation has been formed called Mace Computer Systems, Inc. which is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Vancouver based Mace Technology. The new corporation will continue to provide products such as: mass data storage, control systems, fill controllers, magnetic tapes, drive controllers, communication terminals and a new computer for small business application, the company said.

HBC Mining

Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. Reports net earnings of $7,670,000 or 76 cents a share for the second quarter of 1977 compared with a loss of $274,000 or three cents a share for the previous quarter and net earnings of $5,251,000 or 52 cents for the second quarter of 1976. Net earnings for the first six months were $7,396,000 or 73 cents a share compared with $4,904,000 or 49 cents for the same period last year.

Pine Point

Pine Point Mines Ltd. reports unaudited net earnings for the six months ended June 30 of $6.5 million or $1.45 a share on sales of $45.6 million, compared with $4.3 million or 95 cents a share from sales of $40 million for the corresponding period last year. R. P. Douglas, company president and chief executive officer, says improved prices and sales of lead concentrate combined to increase net earnings. The increase was partly offset by lower sales of zinc concentrate caused by higher prices which were necessary because of sharp increases in power and fuel costs, he said. Douglas also said that the company's 1977 explorations program is proceeding on schedule.

Endako

The Endako mines division of Placer Development Ltd. has announced export prices on molybdenum will be increased 40 cents a pound. This will make the f.o.b. mine base price of molybdenum bought as oxide in drums $4.22 a pound in the United States and $4.27 a pound for molybdic oxide in cans.

Ford Canada

Ford Canada Ltd. reports net income of $25.3 million in the second quarter of 1976, down from $55.9 million in the same period in 1976. Net income per share was $3.04, down from $6.74. For the first six months, net income totalled $59.9 million or $7.22, down from $96.7 million or $11.66 in the first half of 1976.

Bethel Temple Singers of Sacramento

Bethel choir concert set

Bethel Temple Singers, a yough choir comprised of 50 high school and college students from Sacramento, Calif., will be in concert in Victoria on Tuesday.

The performance, at 7:30 p.m., will be held in Glad Tidings Church, 842 North Park Street.

The choir members are all from the youth department of Bethel Temple in Sacramento. Their music is up-to-date to draw the young but solid in message and tempo to appeal to all ages. Each rendition is a culmination of worship, praise and happiness expressed in music.

As a choir, these young people try to complete one task: to share their individual faith in Christ with other young people across the continent. Each member has been chosen from the youth department to represent Bethel Temple in outreach ministry this summer.

Last year's tour took them into seven states, as far east as Denver, Colorado.

Director of Bethel Temple Singers is Richard Wilkerson, director of youth ministries at Bethel Temple.

Wilkerson is an enthusiastic young minister with a specialty in youth ministry. He has travelled extensively across the United States speaking and singing in churches, high schools and colleges. His musical and speaking abilities have been termed the perfect accent to the Bethel Temple Singers.

Accompanying the singers this year will be Eddie Reece, music director at Bethel Temple. He is known across the U.S. for his keyboard artistry, having been pianist for the Couriers and Revivaltime. More recently, he travelled throughout the U.S. and Canada for eight years with his own singing group, Hymntime Singers.

Adventists meet partly in 'rough'

The B.C. Conference of Seventh-day Adventists' 1977 camp meeting will be held Aug. 5-13 at a new campground in 80 acres of natural trees and rocky grandeur — amid some "roughing it," due to delays in completion.

Camp meeting will open Friday at 7:30 p.m. with an address by B.C. president A. W. Kaytor.

Guest speakers throughout the week include J. L. Tucker and his son L. E. Tucker, of radio's Quiet Hour and television's Search, along with grandson Bill in a three-generation preaching team.

Veteran radio-television speaker H. M. S. Richards Sr. of the Voice Of Prophecy will make an appearance, while Del Delker, contralto soloist, will be with them at Hope Aug. 6.

Morris Venden, pastor of Pacific Union College Church, will conduct evening meetings Aug. 9-12, and the best musical talent of the B.C. constituency will be heard in a sacred finale Aug. 31.

Perspectives

By Rev. J. A. DAVIDSON

A critical reader of my newspaper pieces on religion has asked me, "Why can't you be honest for a change and tell your readers that religious faith is mostly rooted in anxiety and fear?" Perhaps he'll give me some credit for being half-honest for saying that some people do embrace religious faith out of anxiety and fear.

Religion can be used as a way of evading life's demands and challenges, as an exercise in escapism. But is it a fair reading of the role of religion in human life to say that it is all rooted in anxiety and fear? And it is not possible that some people reject religion because of their anxiety and fear about the challenges which religion can present to them?

If it is valid — and I know it is — to attribute unworthy motives to some religious persons, is it not, by the same kinds of argument, to attribute such motives also to some of those who reject religion? Why should it be assumed that those who take the way of faith are always open to suspicion, whereas those who reject religion are to be considered clever and objective and unprejudiced?

An interesting case in point is the approach taken by some people who have been influenced by Sigmund Freud's interpretation of religion. They say that religion is essentially a matter of wishful thinking, an illusion rooted in anxiety and fear. They say to the religious believer, "You believe simply because you wish to believe. Your belief is merely a self-inflicted illusion."

But the religious person can come back at them, and with equal cogency: "Your belief about my belief and your own rejection of religion are merely the fulfilment of your wishes, simply your own self-inflicted illusion."

Some of these critics put forth a quite impressive case that belief in God is rooted in what they call "a father complex." But an equally impressive case can be put that disbelief in God can be traced to that jewel of the Freudians, the "Oedipus complex", the jealous desire to overthrow and supplant the father. This game of psychological ploy and counterploy leads to a stalemate, and it is obvious that the issue must be dealt with on other grounds.

Some religious faith does indeed come out of anxiety and fear — but, then, all persons have some experience of anxiety and fear. Some people embrace religion out of timidity and a reluctance to face life's hard challenges. But some repudiate religion on similar grounds.

I am not concerned here to defend religious faith as such.

Nor am I attacking skepticism about religion as such — agnosticism, atheism, rationalism, and the like. My point here is simply that what is sauce for the religious goose can also be a suitable sauce for the skeptical gander.

Puppet 'conversation' augments educational aspect

Mormon youngsters learn history

Founding relived

One hundred and 30 years ago this summer, the war between Mexico and the United States was winding down. Karl Marx was putting the finishing touches to his Communist Manifesto. One hundred thousand Irish were fleeing the potato famine in their homeland and flocking to North America. James K. Polk was in the White House and Brigham Young was leading a tired band of 148 Mormons through the mountains of Utah.

A pretty heady slice of history to lay on youngsters aged 4 to 8 years.

But when it's done the way it was this week at the Victoria Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, it can be a fun way of learning about the past.

The main point of interest for these youngsters was the fact that on July 24, 1847, Brigham Young, after years of persecution in the east, declared "This is the place" as he and his band had their first glimpse of the Great Salt Lake Valley in Utah which was to become the home from that day on of the Mormon Church.

To mark that event, the Victoria children dressed in traditional Mormon costume and played games that in some small way would help them understand the history of their faith. Some dressed as Mormon pioneers; others, dressed as Indians, simulated tribal dances.

Adding to the educational aspect was a puppet show in which the puppets, also in traditional dress, "discussed" the times of 130 years ago.

Sound bodies churches' goal

Health education, physical fitness and correct nutritional practices form a large and increasing role in the activities of several denominations.

Two churches in Victoria which express a lively interest in the worldly as well as the spiritual health of their followers are the Seventh-day Adventist Church at 983 Pandora and the Victoria Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 2990 Quadra.

While they don't have a monopoly on promoting good dietary practices and physical fitness among the local denominations, both churches are anxious to publicize the benefits of good habits.

Mrs. Kathleen Piper, herself a qualified nutritionist from Avondale College, New South Wales, Australia, and a spokeswoman for the church, noted in an interview this week that about 36,500 Canadians die of cancer each year while some 67,000 contract the dread disease.

"Despite years of costly research, cancer remains unconquered, yet the risk factors are known and can be avoided," she said.

Mrs. Piper quoted Dr. Frank Raushner, director of the U.S. Cancer Institute, as saying, "Cancer occurs because of something we do — we eat certain foods, we drink, we smoke, we choose a certain way to live."

A paper presented to a symposium of the American Cancer Society and the U.S. National Cancer Institute by Dr. Roland Phillips of Loma Linda University, California, contains convincing proof that "the way we choose to live" can reduce cancer rates dramatically.

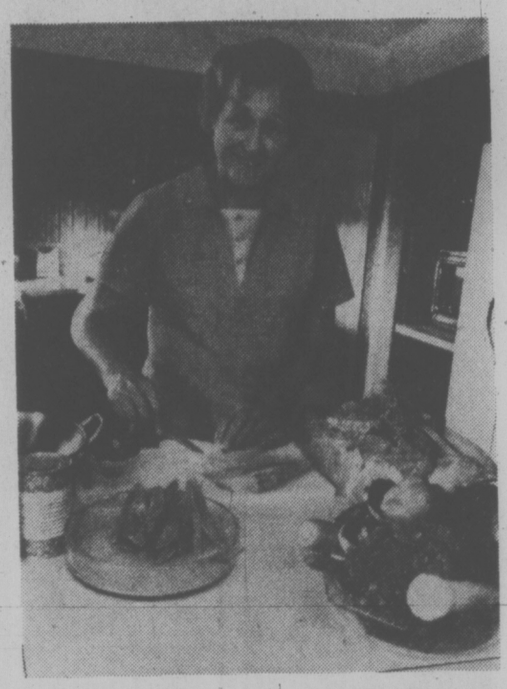
Phillips' paper, which was received by a cross-section of North American medical doctors, stated that Adventists suffered only 28 per cent of the expected death rate for cancer of the bladder, 34 per cent of the rate for cancer of the esophagus, and two per cent of the rate of the rest of the population for cancer of the mouth.

The SDA adherents in the study also had only 50 to 70 per cent of the standard American death rate for cancer of the gastrointestinal-reproductive tracts, a fact closely related to their diet, which contains 25 per cent less fat and 50 per cent more fibre than the typical North American diet.

The Adventists, an evangelical church with more than 500,000 North American members and about three million worldwide, advocate a moderate lifestyle, with no alcohol or tobacco, stern discouragement to coffee and tea, and little or no meat.

Many Adventists follow an even stricter regimen, according to Victoria's Mrs. Piper, herself one of them. They are lacto-ovo vegetarians, meaning they eat dairy and egg products but no meat at all. The diet emphasizes unrefined grains, including cereals and legumes, fresh fruits, vegetables and nuts, limited sugar, but plenty of fruit juice and water.

Coronary failure among the vegetarians was found to be much lower than the general population — vegetarians in the study had one-sixth the incidence of heart attacks as the general population, while other Adventists have about half that of the general population.



Mrs. Piper prepares Oriental summer greens

Summer provides an abundance and wide variety of fresh fruit and vegetables, which should be used freely and daily, says Mrs. Piper, instead of rich, refined desserts and fatty foods.

Here's her formula for a completely balanced meal:

ORIENTAL SUMMER GREENS

Any suitable quantities of:

Green cabbage, Chinese cabbage, bok choy, fresh beansprouts, celery, carrot strips, snow peas, fresh mushrooms, broccoli.

1 can green soybeans.

2 tbsp. soy sauce, veg. juices or water.

Seasoning salt.

Clean and wash all vegetables. Slice each not too fine. Using a wok or deep frypan, add a little vegetable oil and heat. Add vegetables in order of coarseness, keeping finest until last.

Add liquids and allow to simmer until vegetables appear softened (not soft). Add cooked soybeans last.

Serve as a vegetable or main course over cooked brown rice.

With a slice of whole wheat bread spread with margarine and peanut butter, this is a complete meal.

Referring to widespread fears that the polluted environment might be a principal cause of what seems to be a rising incidence of cancer among people in general, Mrs. Piper said:

Seventh-day Adventists do not live in Borneo, or on isolated mountain tops, they are exposed to the same chemicals in the air and water as other North Americans.

"Yet, these simple differences in the lifestyles have greatly reduced the chances of getting cancer.

"The solution to cancer may simply be within ourselves. You won't die of it, if you never get it," she said.

Mrs. Piper, who is married to a doctor who is also a vegetarian, has raised three strapping children to adulthood, all of them vegetarians who are she says, physically larger and stronger than average.

For the past four years, she has given a highly-popular adult education course in vegetarian foods and diet at Camosun Community College.

The Victoria Stake of the Latter-day Saints, in a release entitled A Word of Wisdom, noted that church leaders have always linked physical health to spiritual development.

For that reason, the first hospitals in the intermountain area of the U.S. were built by the church, and as it spread, more emphasis was given to health education, particularly in the developing countries, a church spokesman said.

"In addition to medical treatment, church members are urged to seek a priesthood blessing for the purpose of healing the sick.

"Church programs also emphasize physical and mental wellbeing via recreation. Wherever branches are organized, there are recreation programs that include softball, basketball, volleyball, golf, tennis and other sports," the spokesman said.

Practically every Latter-day Saint meeting house has a cultural hall for recreational activities. Equipped like a gymnasium, each generally includes basketball standards and a stage, complete with curtains, for theatrical presentations.

Following on the words of the first president of the church, Joseph Smith, published as Section 89 of the Doctrine and Covenants, the church teaches abstinence from alcohol, tobacco, coffee and tea, while monthly lessons on nutrition are an important part of the program of the Relief Society, the church women's organization.

Smith, whose revelations dating from the early 1830s, were well ahead of the warning from Health and Welfare of Canada on cigarette packages, wrote: "Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill."

Most of Smith's successors as head of the church have lived well past man's allotted three score and ten years.

Brigham Young, who led the young church to the Great Salt Lake basin a century ago, told followers that "prepare to die" was not the exhortation of the church and kingdom, rather that it was "prepare to live."

"Let us seek to extend the present life to the uttermost, by observing every law of health, and by properly balancing labor, study, rest, and recreation thus prepare for a better life," Young said.

Professor against women priests

WINNIPEG (CP) — Rev. Jean Galot, a professor of theology at Gregorian University in Rome, said in a speech that women are equal to men but should not be allowed to enter the priesthood. He said he did not think women were inferior to men, but opposed their becoming priests because Jesus "did not call any women to be apostles or priests."

Healer, 10, 'Jesus tool'

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — Little Michael, a 10-year-old faith healer from Georgia, who recently held a three-day mission here, said that it was not him but Jesus who was healing the sick.

The boy healer, whose name is Michael Lord, said in an interview that God spoke to him when he was two and that he began preaching at the age of five.

Ursuline Sisters name new head

CHATHAM, Ont. (CP) — Mother Frances Ryan has been installed as the new superior general of the Ursuline Sisters, with Mother Dominica Dietrich stepping down after eight years service with the order. The sisterhood has convents in Ontario, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Michigan, Peru and Santo Domingo.

Two to testify at park service

The eighth in the summer series of 12 gospel services in Beacon Hill Park will be held at the Cameron bandshell at 7 p.m. Sunday.

The Queens Avenue Apostolic Church will be in charge and the gospel message will be given by the pastor, Rev. Alan McLean. Master of ceremonies will be Ken Hollsreund. Two persons will testify to their Christian faith.

There will be selections by the church's orchestral group, violin solos by Wilf Chapman and Ken Hollsround, and a vocal duet by the pastor and Barbara McLean. Organ accompanist will be Alice Castos and the piano accompanist is Barbara McLean.

These outdoor gospel services, in their 35th year are sponsored by Park Services Interdenominational. Their popularity is indicated by the attendance of more than 600 people at last Sunday's service.

Berry Pickers Skinned—NDP

Labor Minister Allan Williams promised Friday to look into opposition charges that two Fraser Valley berry farmers are underpaying pickers and holding back their pay until the end of the season.

David Stupich (NDP — Nanaimo) told the legislature there are two offending growers but he didn't want to name them until "there's some checking."

He accused the growers of taking advantage of pickers unfamiliar with the language and regulations who are "afraid to take on a situation by themselves."

The two offending growers, he said, are paying pickers only a quarter of what they should get. Instead of 25 cents a pound, he said the growers are paying $1.50 per "flat" but flats are being overfilled to 24 pounds instead of 18 pounds.

By holding back pay until the end of the season, he said, pickers can wait eight weeks.

He described accommodation as "very primitive" with six to eight people in one room charged $60 a day "which may include board, I'm not sure."

Williams said he will turn over specific details to the labor standards branch "for such action as is deemed appropriate.

He cautioned that, "as the law stands, we are extremely limited in what we can do."

Williams told Scott Wallace (PC — Oak Bay) that a provincial committee including representatives from labor, management, Workers Compensation and government is looking at asbestos problems.

He also said Cassiar Asbestos has spent "large sums of money" to significantly reduce levels of asbestos fibre at the mine.

He added that a "deadly relationship" has been found between smoking cigarettes and working with asbestos.

Wallace had earlier stated that an asbestos worker who smokes cigarettes is eight times more likely to get cancer than a non-asbestos worker who smokes and 90 times more likely to get cancer than a non-smoker who doesn't work in the asbestos industry.

Responding to William King (NDP — Revelstoke-Slocan), Williams said he hopes a cabinet committee considering an appeal over the granting of a conditional water licence for the Revelstoke Dam will make its decision within two weeks.

If work proceeds, he said, there will be "active discussions" with B.C. Hydro and construction unions to encourage participation by local labor in the Revelstoke area.

Policy Limits Export of Chips

The provincial government is restricting the export of wood chips to producers or their agents, Forestry Minister Tom Waterland said Friday.

He said the new policy will give independent B.C. wood chip producers equal opportunities to sell chips in foreign markets.

"It is aimed at reducing the traditional dominance of the chip markets by the province's major integrated forest products companies, and is in line with the recommendations of the Pearse royal commission on forest resources," Waterland said.

He said an agent must be registered with the chief forester, and a producer will be limited to one agent at a time.

"This new policy will give our non-integrated chip producers a better chance to complete in the developing chip export market," he said.

Waterland said the government removed the $1.50 export tax on the chips as recommended by the commission, and set up a special task force to "stimulate the chip export program.

"The government believes that a monitored chip export program plus new pulp capacity are key requirements to alleviate long-term chip surpluses and achieve forest utilization in the province," he said.

WCB Plans Review Of Hardhat Regulation

The Workers' Compensation Board will take another look at the possibility of waiving its hardhat regulations for those who, for religious reasons, oppose wearing safety headgear, Labor Minister Allan Williams said Friday.

Williams told the legislature the board reviewed the matter last year.

"It was found on that occasion that from a safety point of view, the turban, regardless of the material used in its composition, left a great deal to be desired with regard to the protection of a worker from injuries in industrial operations."

This was the reason, he said, that the board refused to waive the regulations in spite of the record of turbanned soldiers during the Second World War and a decision in the United States, based on the Bill of Rights.

Williams said he had been informed recently that Sikhs had been exempted in the United Kingdom from wearing helmets while riding motorcycles, and as a result he has asked the board to take another look at the situation.

"I have posed as well the offer of some members of the Sikh community to waive any claim there may be if allowed to work without using hardhats," the minister said.

"That's very easy to do when you are seeking this kind of opportunity, but what does the board do or what does society do when some injury arises?" Williams asked. "That's the concern that we have to have.

"We recognize their religious conviction and the very deep, deep roots that wearing a turban has, and they won't be ignored," he added.

EASY WAY to grow mushrooms has been developed by Seattle's Dr. Henry Mee whose innovation is a self-contained "host log" inoculated with mushroom spores. Environment in the first month is important, he says.

Dam Decision At Hand

A special cabinet committee considering an appeal to overturn a water licence granted to B.C. Hydro for construction of the Revelstoke dam is expected to present its decision within two weeks, Labor Minister Allan Williams said Friday.

Williams, who is chairman of the committee, also told the legislature that officials from his department have held preliminary negotiations with Hydro, the contractors and unions involved in efforts to ensure that local people are used on the project.

He noted that his committee is studying eight volumes of transcripts resulting from the five days of hearings held on the appeal, in addition to 28 volumes from the original hearings.

"I think that we are now in a position to complete our deliberations, and I hope to have a decision within two weeks."

He said that if the decision was in favor of continuing with the project — work costing $50 million already is under way — his ministry will begin active discussions about the utilization of local workers.

NO BREACH—SPEAKER

Speaker Ed Smith has cleared Finance Minister Evan Wolfe of breach of privilege charges raised earlier this week by Norm Levi (NDP — Vancouver-Burrard).

Smith told the legislature Friday that Levi's privileges had not been breached as a result of Wolfe authorizing newspaper advertisements for four senior positions in the government's proposed B.C. Systems Corp.

Levi charged that Wolfe had acted improperly in authorizing the ads because the legislation setting up the corporation has yet to gain legislative approval.

Smith, relying heavily on a ruling he made earlier this month in a simlar situation raised by Liberal leader Gordon Gibson, said Wolfe had committed no breach.

"I cannot agree that any member has been obstructed or impeded in the performance of his duties," Smith said.

Wolfe had previously argued the ads did not specifically refer to the systems corporation and that the four new positions would have to be filled regardles of whether the corporation received legislative approval.

1974 Store Murder Case Involving Boy, 13, Closed

Attorney-General Garde Gardom said Friday the case of the 1974 murder of Edward Burtinshaw by a 13-year-old boy is closed.

Gardom told the legislature his ministry had asked the RCMP on March 5 to reopen the investigation, following information from a person suggesting there was new evidence important to the case.

Burtinshaw, 20, was found shot to death in Woodward's downtown department store, where he worked as a night maintenance man. The juvenile found guilty of the murder was placed in the care of welfare officials and has been given psychiatric treatment, but was not locked up because there are no facilities for him.

The boy was found drinking in a city park last fall. Welfare officials at that time refused to comment on why he was free or on the type of treatment he was getting.

The attorney-general said the RCMP presented a report following a "highly detailed and extensive investigation," which was studied by the director of criminal law and senior officials of his ministry.

"The report finds, and we unanimously conclude, that the disposition of this case was completely proper; namely, that the person responsible for the death of Burtinshaw is the person that has been apprehended, convicted, is a juvenile and is serving the disposition of the court," said Gardom.

Diviner Delights Water Seekers

Story, photos by Derek Sidenius

Spry, old Cliff Brackett gets a twinge

No doubt about it—there's water below.

Hidden power points stick to the spot

'Down There' Says the Man and He's Seldom Wrong

When the ministry of education wanted to know where to drill the well for a new school in Terrace, who did they send for?

Cliff Brackett.

When B.C. Ferries wanted to know where to put a well at the terminal on Pender Island, who did they get?

Cliff Brackett.

And when a developer in Sechelt needed someone to tell him where to dig wells in a subdivision, who did he turn to?

Cliff Brackett.

Brackett is a water witcher, a diviner of water, a practitioner of the archaic art of dousing.

Give him a willow — really any forked stick, rod, even a coathanger will do — let him roam and he'll tell you if there's water on your property . . . and where.

He'll point and say: "Down there."

And you look and you see the end of the forked stick trembling like a snake poised to strike. He won't say how far down the water is, but his simple assertion water is there leaves little doubt he's correct.

For one thing you tend to respect a man who is 85 and as fit as a fiddle, spryer than most men half his age.

For another you've got to admit a person who has been divining water for 70 years should know what he's talking about.

He says he's seldom been wrong. And you believe him even if you have seen scientific studies that conclude a water witcher's ability to find water is no different from chance.

★

The Bracketts are something of an institution in the lower Gulf Islands. Brackett's father, a stonemason, moved to Pender Island from New Westminster in 1896 and bought 185 acres on Browning Harbor Road.

Brackett has lived there all his life, raising a family of five boys and two girls.

He began witching for water when he was 15, learning the knack from his brother-in-law George Nelson of Saltspring Island.

"I saw George do it and thought I'd give it a try," he says. "I picked up a stick and it went down for me. That was the start of it. I've been doing it ever since."

He's divined most of the wells on Pender Island and a good number on Galiano, Saturna, Salt Spring and the lower half of Vancouver Island. He's in constant demand but in the past few years has tapered off, doing only four or five a month, mostly for Langford drillers Ray and Herb Krenbrink.

Divining has always only been an avocation for Brackett. His real job was a logger.

He belonged to that sturdy breed of men who, armed with a crosscut saw and springboard felled the giant timbers up and down the coast. He worked the bush long before anyone heard of McMillan or Bloedel. He ran the gamut of jobs — faller, high rigger, rigging slinger, hook tender, camp boss. He retired 20 years ago, serving out the last years managing a booming ground near Nanaimo.

He says he used to row a boat to work when he worked the camps on Saturna and Mayne. He'd also row to the islands to get mail and groceries, and even to Sidney on special occasions, a trip that would take four hours, one way.

★

In the early days he used to waterwitch for nothing. But he says he got so busy de decided to charge a fee — $5. Today the fee is $50.

Watching him handle the willow it is impossible to restrain the inevitable question.

"How does it work?"

"You tell me," he shoots back. "Your guess is as good as mine."

Hello Dollies! So Nice To Have You All Around

Dolls have never played a big part in my life.

I vaguely remember being small and having a large and rather ugly cowboy-type doll we used to call California. But that's about all. Even my two daughters didn't dally with dolls for very long.

But I met a woman this week who is very much preoccupied with dolls and is using her family's collections as the basis of a first-of-a-kind show in Victoria next month.

There were nothing but dolls everywhere when I called in to chat with Ginny Marshall-Lang. They covered almost all the available space in the large living room and, in fact, Lady, the family's cocker spaniel, and I had a hard job finding a spot in which to seat ourselves!

Dolls, dolls, dolls. They sat relaxing on the sofas and chairs, the larger lifelike ones, some of them quite gruesome-looking. They squatted on tables and sideboards, the more petite kinds; and row after row of tiny ones peered down at me from every ledge and shelf.

I couldn't help feeling I was being watched by a thousand eyes in the morning. But Ginny Marshall-Lang was quite at home sitting next to a coffee table strewn with books on dolls (what else?) and surrounded by her quiet friends.

And she talked enthusiastically about the Doll Show, which is to be held in the Georgian Room of the Empress Hotel from noon to 9 p.m. on Aug. 27 and which will feature, as well as the fruits of many others' labor, the work of four generations of Ginny's family.

Ginny's daughter Kristina, who is eight today, has her own collection and is knitting some of the clothes the baby dolls will wear in the show. Between them, the mother and daughter have about 100 dolls, a real mixture, as Ginny says, of older ones, contemporary (what they call modern collectibles) and rag dolls.

Ginny's mother, Maureen Marshall, a Canadian living in California where she's well-known as an artist and dollmaker and president of the San Francisco Women's Artists Society, has brought up her own valuable collection of 18 antique dolls for the show. Made prior to 1925, they are all bisque-headed French or German dolls valued at between $350 to $500 each.

Ginny's grandmother (great-grandmother to Kristina), Victoria artist Greta Stevenson, is dressing some of the dolls for the show, which is to benefit the Norfolk House School building fund.

Not all of those who will display their dolls are connected to Ginny's family, however — or even to Norfolk House School. Many Victoria people, who don't have collections but may be have one or two old or interesting dolls, will be showing them, Ginny said.

That, in fact, is often the way people get started collecting dolls—having a few left from childhood.

"Little girls are always given a lot of dolls," Ginny explained. "While some do end up at the Salvation Army, many more are kept because parents hate to throw them out and that's how collections start."

In a house so full of dolls, can a little girl learn to love them?

Sure. Kristina, who is more often called Cricket, does, her mother said. The softer ones she carries around and cuddles, just like any other girl, even though she's very much a tomboy and a keen horseback-rider.

"They're not all play dolls for a little girl, of course," Ginny added. "But some of them are 'talking-to' dolls and Cricket sits and talks to them for hours."

Most of them have names and many have interesting period or ethnic costumes and if you want to talk to one or two of them yourself, maybe buy one, win one in a raffle, or perhaps just look them over, then be at the Empress on Aug. 27.

All of those things will be possible at the show, which Ginny called four shows in one.

"As well as the 500 or so dolls on display, there will be about 250 nicely-dressed dolls, some complete with their own wardrobes and little trunks, for sale or auction," explained Ginny.

"There have been doll displays here before but nothing of this magnitude. This show will have the biggest variety of dolls ever shown in one place here before.

"There should be something of interest to everyone — collectors or just people interested in seeing nice dolls. We've tried hard to make it something very special."

Rehab Unit Moves

Greater Victoria Drug and Alchohol Rehabilitation Society has moved from 1080 Meares to suite 202 on the second floor of the Maynard Building, 733 Johnson.

But DARS director George Stegen said the two units, although under the same roof, will be separate.

The Detox Centre, 941 McClure, which also comes under DARS jurisdiction, will continue to operate from that location.

Six-Hour Examination On Ill-Fated Camp Boat

Two marine safety officers have completed an examination of the pontoon boat that became a death trap for seven handicapped persons in Lake Cowichan on Thursday.

Alex Greig of Victoria, and Graham Thraves of Nanaimo, employees of the federal ministry of transport, spent nearly six hours Friday examining the boat.

The results of their findings, which are expected to contain an explanation for why the boat suddenly overturned, will not be made public at least until the inquest which was ordered Friday by Duncan coroner Tom Lines.

The boat, specially designed and built to carry handicapped persons and used at the Lions Easter Seal camp on Lake Cowichan, was seized by police late Thursday.

A police spokesman said today the boat can now be returned to the B.C. Lions Society for Crippled Children which runs the camp.

Police are still withholding the name of the seventh victim, a 55-year-old Victoria man, pending notification of next-of-kin.

The names of the other six were released Friday.

The victims, all adults with mental or physical handicaps, were travelling in the boat to a point down the lake when the vessel turned over. Two counsellors accompanying the group swam to safety.

But the seven handicapped were trapped under the deck, their passage blocked by a wire mesh railing around the permimeter.

An MoT official said on Friday there was no requirement on the society to have the vessel safety-checked before using it, and such an inspection was never done.

Meanwhile, camp officials prepared to re-open the camp on Aug. 7. All campers had been sent home after the tragedy.

Jack Baker, vice-president of the B.C. Lions Society, said "you don't scrap a valuable program because something went wrong."

"We are certainly shocked but we will re-open for the remaining two camps."

Police Squad Averts Melee At Cabaret

A quick show of strength by Esquimalt and Victoria police early today averted what could have developed into a melee outside the Bacchanalia Cabaret at 905 Esquimalt.

An Esquimalt police spokesman said police received a report at 2:10 a.m. of a large crowd of about 50 youths squaring off for a fight in fron of the cabaret.

The spokesman said that instead of checking out the report first, a call was put in immediately for reinforcements.

Within minutes five police cars from Victoria and two from Esquimalt converged on the scene, to the amazement of the combatants.

Upon the arrival of police the fight broke up and the crowd dispersed.

The spokesman said the fight apparently started when a drink was spilled on someone inside the club.

No one was hurt in the short-lived fight and no charges were laid.

Residents have complained repeatedly to council about the noise from the cabaret, but Mayor Young repeated today there is little the municipality can do to stop it.

He said the problem is the anti-noise bylaw applies only to persons and not things. In other words if there is a complaint about noise police have to catch the person making the noise or disturbance. A charge cannot be laid against the business or its owner.

"The law is very technical and very difficult to enforce," he said.

"The noise is a problem for which really there is no easy answer."

Mount Douglas Closed

Mount Douglas was closed to the public today because of the high fire hazard from continuing dry weather.

The picnic area to the east of Cordova Bay Road will remain open, said Saanich Ald. Sandy Noel, chairman of the Joint Victoria-Saanich committee which administers the park.

"The kids usually get in there and start a fire once a year," Noel said. The closure is an attempt to stop trouble before it starts.

The road to the summit lookout will be blocked and trails for both hikers and riders will be posted, he said. Brush on the mountain-side is tinder dry.

Ask The Times

Q. We have just arrived from Nova Scotia, and wondered if you can tell us something about the Monkey Tree or Monkey Puzzle tree? I.M.

A. Its botanical name is araucaria imbricata — a native of the western slopes of the Andes in Chile, and Southwest Argentina. It was introduced into England by Dr. Archibald Menzies, surgeon on Capt. Vancouver's ship. It was probably brought here by an English settler. It is fairly hardy and it flowers.

Q. A friend told me it is unlucky for a hare to cross a person's path. Is this true? W.F.

A. According to medieval superstitions, the hare is a melancholy beast. If its flesh was eaten, it generated melancholy in any who partook it. But the Hindus claim the hare is sacred.

WHA to Give 'Hell of a Lot' For Acceptance

TORONTO (CP) — The World Hockey Association will be "giving up a hell of a lot if we're accepted" in the National Hockey League, Gilles Leger, general manager of the WHA Birmingham Bulls, said Friday.

His league has agreed to demands of the NHL player rights committee in the latest move to bring about a merger between the professional groups.

The NHL's demands are a key to the league's acceptance of at least six WHA franchises in an expansion vote and may strip the WHA of its top players whose rights are also held by NHL clubs. The NHL is seeking compensation for those players.

"We could lose key playing personnel and receive nothing in return," Leger said. "Compensation is important but what can you do?"

William DeWitt, board chairman for Cincinnati Stingers, said: "Some of our clubs look at this very emotionally and the demands on player rights make some of us wonder, but we must concede that it's just part of a business deal. Fortunately, we will not be affected to the extent of other clubs."

The settlement, Toronto Globe and Mail says involves three categories of players:

● Negotiation nominees or WHA players who have never played in the NHL or were never drafted by NHL clubs. For example, should forward Anders Hedberg's contract with the WHA Winnipeg Jets lapse, Toronto Maple Leafs, who own Hedberg's NHL rights, will have prior negotiation rights. Should the Leafs sign Hedberg they would not have to compensate the Jets.

● Unsigned draft choices who defected from the NHL and signed with the WHA. This demand is retroactive through the 1977 amateur draft and covers two areas.

First, if the WHA signs a player selected in the 1977 amateur draft who was also picked in a similar round of the NHL draft, the WHA will compensate the NHL with a draft pick in 1978.

Second, a player such a Birmingham's Mark Napier, who has played in the WHA and only became eligible for the NHL draft this year, would be treated differently. Montreal Canadiens drafted Napier in June and under the NHL's new player rights, could sign with Montreal when his contract expires next season. The Canadiens would not owe the Bulls any compensation.

However, if the Bulls renegotiate Napier's contract, Montreal will collect a first-round draft choice as compensation.

● Established defected players such as Bobby Hull of the Jets and Marc Tardif of Quebec Nordiques, who turned leagues, could return to their original clubs at the exploration of the WHA contracts without compensation.

In addition, the NHL imposed a May, 1977, cutoff on the WHA regarding renewed contracts. Any contract signed since then will not be honored by the NHL.

An example is Real Cloutier of the Nordiques who will still be bound to a contract signed in 1974 and not the multi-year pact he signed at the end of the season. His NHL rights are owned by Chicago Black Hawks.

New England Whalers, Winnipeg, Edmonton Oilers, Calgary Cowboys, Birmingham, Houston Aeros, Quebec and Cincinnati all have applied for NHL membership. The NHL governors are expected to vote on individual applications Aug. 9 in New York.

Harry Sinden, general manager of Boston Bruins headed the players rights committee along with William Torrey general manager of New York Islanders, and Sam Pollock, vice-president and general manager of the Canadiens.

The Bruins are opposed to the merger and apparently so are Toronto Maple Leafs and Los Angeles Kings.

"We feel the committee demands are fair," Sinden said.

WHA clubs accepted into an expanded NHL will have to pay a $2.9-million entry fee and play within their own divison for the 1977-78 season. They will play NHL opposition in playoffs and exhibition games.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — Victoria City and St. Catharines Rowing Clubs each won two races Friday as 10 finals were held on the third day of the 95th annual Royal Canadian Henley Regattta with eight clubs earning victories.

St. Catharines, with two victories, took a commanding lead in the aggregate point standings a the host club also picked up a second and a third-place finish.

St. Catharines has 175 points after three days of racing but two days of finals. Hamilton Leander Boat Club is second with 74 points. London Ont. Rowing Club is third with 67 points, Wyandote, Mich., Rowing Club is fourth with 65 and Victoria City completes the top five with 58.

Other winners of Friday's finals were New York Aquatic Club, Peterborough, Ont., Rowing Club, Lake Washington Rowing Club of Seattle, London RC, Wyandotte and Kennebecasis Rowing Club of Rothesay, N.B.

The highlight of Friday's competiton was the double victory by Sandy Kirby of Victoria City. The 27-year-old Kirby won the 1000-metre women's single and one hour later, she combined with 18-year-old Katie Burke to take the women's doubles. Miss Burke was sixth in singles.

Kirby's success provided Victoria with its third title at Henley. Bruce Hood won the heavy singles Thursday.

St. Catharines recorded wins in the junior 135-pound eight and the senior 155-pound pair as Jim Marino and J. P. Burak combined efforts.

The New York club won its fourth open quad title at the Henley in the last five years as it easily defeated second-place finisher Detroit Boat Club and third-place finisher Brock University Boat Club of St. Catharines in a three-boat race.

Peterborough won the junior 145-pound cox-four, Tom Hazeltine of Lake Washington took the junior 145-pound single, London won the junior 155-pound fourr and Wyandotte was the junior 145-pound eight winner.

Joyce Not Thinking About Retirement Yet

EDMONTON (CP) — Joyce Yakubowich of Victoria and Marv Nash of Toronto welcomed the news Friday that good weather is forecast today for the Canadian trials for the world cup of track and field scheduled in Dusseldorf, West Germany, next month.

"It will be the same for everybody but you can only expect world-class performances in world-class conditions," Mrs. Yakubowich said in an interview.

"We don't get enough outstanding competitions in Canada and this might be the best all-Canadian meet ever held," she added.

Nash had a particular reason for anticipating warm weather. He has been training all-out for only two weeks since a hamstring pull sidelined him for more than a month.

"I think I have enough experience to pull me through," Nash said, although this is the first time he has seen all of Canada's top sprint aces at the same competition.

"I don't think cool or wet weather will hamper me physically but it might cause a problem psychologically. I wont be short of conditioning but maybe I'll feel the effect of too few good competitions."

The Toronto speedster said experience is important even in an event such as his specialty, the 100-metre dash. We also will contest the 200-metre event in the two-day competition.

"Even in 10 seconds, there is lots of time for errors and indecisions," said Nash, 23. "My experience will help before the race and in the blocks, at least."

Nash has been a Canadian standout since he burst onto the scene as a junior at 17. He reached the semi-finals at the Montreal Olympics last summer for the best performance by a Canadian sprinter.

Yakubowich, home from an outstanding string of performances at 200 and 400 metres during a European tour, said she will not concern herself with the possibility of being upset until the last moment.

"You always know who has been having good times but all you can do in a race is your best."

She expects to participate at both her specialties.

The competition is being conducted by the Commonwealth Games Foundation in preparation for the 1978 games here. Nash and Yakubowich both said they expect to participate.

The runners agreed they are displeased at suggestions Canada will not do well at Guadalajara, Mexico, in the North American zone trials leading up to the world cup.

"We have the potential to do extremely well," said Nash, who probably is in the toughest individual competition of the American zone trials.

"My problem is that South America is full of good sprinters and Don Quarrie and Hasely Crawford will probably be there, too."

Quarrie and Crawford have staged a long history of head-to-head competition at 100 and 200 metres. Crawford won the Olympic 100-metre dash last year.

Yakubowich, 23, said she will not concern herself with the Mexican competition until after her events here. After that, she will worry about the World Cup and only then will she concentrate on the Commonwealth Games.

"People are always asking me when I'm going to quit but I'm not thinking about that. It isn't in my plans."

DOUG PEDEN - EDITOR

Nanaimo Blasted By Gordon Head

Gordon Head, holder of the Victoria-area crown, saved the cruncher for the finish Friday in a 15-0 blasting of Nanaimo in the Vancouver Island Little League sectional baseball tournament at Sidney Park.

Starting the final inning with a 5-0 margin over the Hub City squad, the Gordon Head crew unloaded a 10-run barrage that included a grand slam home run by Gary Frechette.

Daryn Lansdell fashioned the pitching triumph, yielding only three hits and striking out 10 batters in a route-going effort.

Among the Gordon Head batting stars was Drew Ferrill, who drilled three hits and drove in four runs.

The best-of-three Island final continues tonight at 6:30. If a third game is required to decide the team advancing into the provincial tournament next weekend at Trail, it will be played at 2 p.m. Sunday.

BABE RUTH TEAM LOSES

KELOWNA — Victoria Firefighters are at the point of no return in the British Columbia senior Babe Ruth baseball championships.

Trail blanked Victoria 2-0 Friday to drop Firefighters into the losers' bracket in the double-knockout tournament. Victoria was to face Kelowna today.

That's More Like It Says Bates' Manager

SANTA ROSA, Calif. — Victoria manager Joe Patterson would have preferred a sweep but he still found a lot of pleasure as Bates split with Santa Rosa Barons on Friday.

The bat of designated-hitter Frank Bocci did most of the damage as Barons defeated Bates 4-3 in the first half of a doubleheader, but the Canadian men's softball champions came back to decision the host team 4-1 behind the three-hit pitching of Andy Konopacki.

"We're starting to play the kind of ball we're capable of playing," said Patterson. "The first game was a great game and it's the kind you don't mind losing."

Although Santa Rosa managed only four hits off starter Stan Kern and reliever Dave Ruthowsky, two by Bocci did most of the damage. Bocci connected for a two-run homer in the third inning and then drove in the winning run with a triple in the fifth.

Outfielder Ken Bate sparked Victoria's offense by scoring two runs after cranking out two triples.

Bate also had a single and scored once in Victoria's winning effort. Bob Burrows tagged losey Guy French for two of eight hits mustered by Victoria.

Bates, now with a 3-9, won-lost record to show for their travels, wind up a tour of the U.S. with another doubleheader here tonight.

Flora Keeps Crown

Flora Martin of the Burnside club completed a seven-victory march Friday at Lakehill Lawn Bowling Club to capture her second successive crown in the Vancouver Island "champion of champions" women's singles competition.

Martin, who avoided defeat in the round-robin event that matches club champions, nailed down the title in the final round with 21-15 decision over Carol MacGregor of Victoria West.

Una Val-Davies of Gordon Head finished second with a 6-1 mark.

Marg Gilstein of Victoria Lawn Bowling Club took the novice event with a 6-1 record. Deadlocked at 5-2 were Joyce Hole of Canadian Pacific and Lucy Cheston of Victoria West.

Competition in the week-long, annual Island tournaments is scheduled to start Monday with the women pursuing titles at the Beacon Hill greens and men playing at the Oak Bay club.

Cole's No-Hitter Sparks Builders

Pitcher Larry Cole didn't have to look very far Friday night to find a friend in the opening game of the Sooke Merchants senior men's softball tournament at Sooke Athletic Park.

His best pal was behind a mask about 46 feet away.

It was catcher Pete Rumsby, who helped his battery-mate considerably by belting a grand-slam home run and cracking a two-run double as Juan de Fuca Builders demolished Sidney Hotel 11-0.

Brad Girling also contributed a homer to the victory of the Stuffy McGinnis League team over the Sidney League squad.

Cole actually needed only a meagre measure of batting support to chalk up the triumph.

He pitched a no-hitter and struck out 10 Sidney swingers in the game that was halted after five innings because of the large Builder lead.

The 10-team tourney resumed today and will continue until Monday.

In a Stuffy McGinnis League game at Central Park, Randy Jackson was also in fine pitching form.

Jackson tossed a three-hitter as he received two runs in the opening inning on singles by Keith Heppell and Lou Vermette and outdueled Colony Inn hurler Bob Dobish, who allowed only two safeties as Ingraham blanked Colony 2-0 and climbed within three points of second place.

Cadets in Spotlight At B.C. Rifle Meet

Sharpshooting cadets grabbed a big piece of the spotlight Friday at Heal's Range in the B.C. Rifle Association's annual prize meeting.

They also added a touch of perfection as they accounted for one victory in Friday's two individual matches and lost out in a shootoff in the other.

Rick Tomsett of the Sidney Air Cadets and Phil Bramhill of the PPCLI Cadets each notched perfect tallies of 105 from ranges of 300, 500 and 600 yards to finish on top in the first stage of the Lieutenant-Governor's Match.

Tomsett took the first-stage trophy in a shootoff but wasn't as fortunate in another shootoff, this one for first place in the City of Westminster Match.

Tomsett and fellow-cadets M. Bhanji and L. Blanchette all fired 50 out of a possible 50 in the Westminster to wind up in a deadlock with Earl Brown of Alberta and Bob Pitcairn of Delta.

The veteran Pitcairn, a former Bisley contestant, was the winner in the five-way shootoff to make it a two-victory day.

Pitcairn and his son, Don, were an accurate pair as they took the Families (parent-child) Match.

This time it was the son who provided perfection and dad who dropped the point as the Pitcairns fired 49 out of a possible 50. Don and Rob Bullock finished in second place among the eight contesting couples.

Competition at Heal's is continuing through the weekend and is scheduled to wind up Monday afternoon.

CONSTRUCTION UNDER WAY AT GLEN MEADOWS

Peninsula's First Curling Club

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Greater Victoria's seventh curling club, and the first on the Saanich Peninsula, is expected to be open for operation by mid-October.

Construction got under way this week on a six-sheet rink at the Glen Meadows Golf and Country Club on McTavish Road.

The six sheets will boost to 50 the number in the Greater Victoria area.

Victoria, the area's first curling club constructed in 1952, Playland, Juan de Fuca and the Racquet Club all have eight sheets while Esquimalt's Sports Centre and the Oak Bay Recreation Centre have six sheets.

Glen Meadows owner Percy Criddle said the $350,000 addition to the McTavish Road club, which also included tennis as well as golf facilities, now "will offer a more diversified sports service" to Central and North Saanich residents.

While there is a "nominal" fee for membership, Criddle says Glen Meadows will continue to stick to a policy of "charging (members) for what they use . . . and not an all-package fee that sometimes prohibits or deters people from joining."

Under Glen Meadows present operation, a golf membership entitles the member to use both golf and tennis facilities. Persons interested only in tennis can take out a membership that will allow them on the courts but not on the golf course.

The curling structure, said Criddle, will "allow for both membership and commercial curling."

And, he added, an "all-package membership" will be available to anyone interested in all three sports.

Additional locker-rooms and an expansion of the existing lounge are included in the present construction plans.

Criddle says installation of an extra-capacity freezer unit will permit the club to have ice for summer-time use.

And "a stroke of luck" will allow Glen Meadows curlers to use new rocks as soon as construction is completed.

The club had been prepared for a year's wait for new stones. A cancellation order with the Scottish firm has made Glen Meadows heir to six new sets of stones.

Kite Working On a Theory

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Tom Kite has a theory about golf tournaments.

"You can't win a tournament in the first round, or the second round, or the third round," he said. "All you can do on those days is try not to lose the golf tournament; jockey for position; try to put yourself in position where you can win it on the last day."

And Kite, defending the only title he has won, has done just that.

He went two over par after seven holes of Friday's second round and was in danger of losing his spot among the leaders and his chance at eventual victory in the $200,000 Philadelphia golf tournament.

But he rallied with birdies on five of six holes beginning on the ninth to salvage an erratic, two-under-par 69. That gave him a tie for the halfway lead with New Zealand's John Lister at 135, seven under par on the tight 6,687-yard Whitemarsh Valley Country Club course.

"It wasn't," Kite said in understatement of his four-bogey, six-birdie, eight-par effort, "a very classical round."

But it was very important.

"I kept myself in the ball game," he said. "It sounds kind of funny, but that's sometimes the kind of round you get when you're playing good. I really didn't hit that many bad shots and I turned an over-par round into a decent one, almost a good one."

One stroke out of the lead at 136 was slender Danny Edwards. Edwards, a winner at Greensboro earlier in the year, shot a 69 in the mild, hazy weather. J. C. Snead, with a 71, and Mike Hill, who had an eagle two on his way to a 69, were at 137.

First-round leader Terry Diehl slipped to a 73 and was in a large group at 138.

Gorge Vale Skids Into Fourth Spot

Disaster struck Gorge Vale Friday as one-sided decisions were the fashion in the Vancouver Island Seniors' Golf League.

Holding down second place when the day's play started, the Gorge crew was thumped 5½-½ by the front-running Victoria Golf Club team and skidded down into the fourth position.

Victoria, yielding only a half point to Tom Milligan, who salvaged a half in his individual match against Bob Jernburg, is now 6½ points ahead of Royal Colwood, the biggest benefactor in Friday's contests.

Colwood clobbered trailing Cedar Hill 6-0 and holds a one-point edge over third-place Glen Meadows, which joined the "big win" parade by thumping Uplands 5½-½.

Friday's results:

Movers Finish With Run Spree

Greaves Movers may again be moving in the right direction.

Former leaders of the Victoria Senior Amateur Baseball League who have skidded behind Gorge Hotel, the Movers broke a second-place deadlock Friday night by bouncing Kubicek A's 7-5 at Lambrick Park.

Greaves needed a big finish to get home in front against the league trailers.

They snapped a 3-3 tie in the top of the final inning with a four-run outburst and then subdued a last-ditch Kubicek rally that produced two tallies.

Big batters for the Movers were Dave Morgan, who cracked a two-run double and then scored the winning run in the seventh, and George Lomas, who stepped in as a pinch-hitter and drove in three runs in the last two inning.

Big Day for Winnipeg Amateur

WINNIPEG (CP)—A little-known Winnipeg amateur outshot Canada's best touring professionals Friday to grab the first-round lead of the Manitoba Open golf championship.

While most of the top pros struggled to stay even with Rossmere's well manicured, par-69 layout, amater Dave Hill conquered the 6,088-yard course with a three-under-par 66.

The 27-year-old lawyer, playing in only his second tournament this year, combined his normal long hitting game with an unusually accurate putter to shoot nines of 33-33. That was par on the front nine and three under on the back side.

"I hit my first drive up around the corner and got a birdin on the first hole," said Hill. "That was very important because I usually take a bogey on the opening hole."

With his confidence building, the three-time Manitoba junior champion hit 14 greens in regulation and one-putted six greens.

He took only two bogeys, both on the front nine where narrow, well-treed fairways demand extremely accurate shooting.

Hill was among the early finishers and he admitted he didn't anticipate his score standing up to the professionals. But as others finished it became evident that he would enter today's second round of the $15,000 tournament with the lead.

The field of more than 110 will be after today's round with the low-60 scores and ties going into Sunday's final 18 holes seeking the $3,000 top prize.

Two shots back of Hill are three of the top Canadian professionals: Dan Talbot of Beloiel, Que., John Morgan of Victoria and Dave Barr of Vancouver, all tied at 68.

Another stroke back is Winnipeg amateur Terry Hashimoto and professionals Randy Brekke of Winnipeg, Mike Ford of Tuckahoe, N.J., Dick Carmody of Poway, Calif., Ray Thompson of Philadelphia, Tim McCutcheon of Kitchener, Ont., Pat O'Donnell of Windor, Ont., and Roger Klatt of Edmonton.

The top 12 were the only golfers to shoot even or under par despite the ideal playing conditions, easy pin placements and a near perfectly prepared course.

Professional Cec Ferguson of Victoria was well back at 38-39 — 77.

SYDNEY PLACES THIRD BUT MISSES TEAM SPOT

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — Lisa Young of Prince Rupert won the British Columbia junior girls' golf championship Friday with a 36-hole total of 163, one shot better than Tracy Stoddart, of North Vancouver.

Young shot an 83 and Stoddart an 84 Friday after sharing the first-round lead Thursday with Jill Johnson of Ganges, all at 80.

Johnson shot a 90 Friday and finished in a fourth-place tie with Lynne Akert, of Penticton, who had an 82 for a 170 total.

Sydney Thompson of Victoria also had an 82 Friday and finished third at 167.

The remainder of the top ten included: Anne Newman of Campbell River, 82-91—173, Christa Barnes of Kelowna, 88-88—176, Brenda Lord of West Vancouver, 86-93—179, Lynne Westnedge of Kimberley, 95-84—179, Linda Jervis of Pitt Meadows, 88-92—180 and Michelle Fulton of Burnaby, 89-91—180.

Akert, Stoddart and Young were selected to the team which will represent B.C. at the Canadian junior girls championship in Ontario, Aug. 8-12.

Dale Nine Shots Behind Co-Leaders

POCONO MANOR, Pa. (AP) — Amy Alcott, Dot Germain and Beth Stone fired three-under-par 70s Friday and shared a one-shot lead after first-round play in the $75,000 Pocono Northeast golf tournament.

Alcott, of Santa Monica, Calif., birdied two of the final four holes on the par 37-36—73, 6,468-yard Pocono Manor Golf Club, to grab a piece of the lead, while Germain, of Greensboro, N.C., and Stone, of Miami, had slightly more erratic rounds.

Germain posted an eagle in her round that included six birdies and give bogeys.

Stone knocked in short birdie putts on three of the first four holes to post a four-under 33 for the front nine. But she ran into problems on the final hole, where she missed the green and had to settle for a bogey.

Five golfers, including Jane Blalock, a two-time winner this year, were at 71. Also tied at two-under mark were Debbie Austin of West Palm Beach, Fla.; Beth Solomon of Middletown, Ind.; Ai-Yu-Tu of Taiwan and Joann Dost of Vienna, Va.

The pre-tournament favorite, JoAnne Carner of Lake Worth. Fla., finished with a 74.

Dale Shaw of Victoria carded 40-39—79.

The field will be cut after today's second round to the low 60's and ties.

The final round will be played Sunday with the winner getting $11,000 of the $75,000 prize money.

Hillman To Coach Jets

WINNIPEG (CP) — Winnipeg Jets of the World Hockey Association announced the signing Friday of Larry Hillman as coach, replacing Bobby Kromm.

Hillman, 40, was with the Jets in 1975-76, picking up 12 points in 71 games.

He is a former National Hockey League star who played on five Stanley Cup teams.

Hillman had been speculated as the likely replacement for Kromm, who coached the team for the last two years and has taken over as coach of Detroit Red Wings of the NHL.

Terms Suit Goltz

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Pitcher Dave Goltz, who at 12-6 has the best record on the Minnesota Twins' pitching staff, has reached a contract agreement with the American League baseball club.

Pact Redesigned

BERLIN (AP) — East Germany and the Soviet Union have worked out a new agreement for increased co-operation in sports, the East Berlin news agency ADN said Tuesday. Both countries signed the pact in Leipzig, where a major national sports festival is under way this week.

FORMER ALL-STAR END PICKED UP BY LIONS

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions announced Friday they had acquired import tight end Tyrone Walls from Edmonton Eskimos in a Western Football Conference trade.

Walls, 29, was sent to the Lions for B.C.'s third-round pick in the 1978 Canadian draft.

The former all-star began the season on Edmonton's injured reserve list after being injured in an exhibition game. The Eskimos have used Canadian Don Warrington at tight end in their first two games.

The Lions have been using rookie import Richard Appleby at tight end and Appleby caught a 41-yard touchdown pass in a win against Saskatchewan Roughriders. Head coach Vic Rapp criticized Appleby for his lack of blocking, however, after a 24-5 loss Tuesday in a rematch with the Roughriders.

Lack of Funds No Problem to Soviet Archeologist

Whatever problems Russian academics may have, lack of funds doesn't seem to be one of them.

Dr. Boris Piotrovsky, one of the Soviet Union's leading archeologists, looked slightly puzzled when he was asked by a reporter Friday whether he had any money worries that were hindering research projects.

To one of his counterparts in the West the question would have had some relevance and probably would have resulted in the usual complaints about tight-fisted governments and the philistinism of politicians.

But Piotrovsky, who was just winding up a week of lectures at the University of Victoria on the arts of Scythia and Urartu, explained through an interpreter that the Russians have a different approach to such things.

"A very positive role is played by the centralization of funds," he said. "There are very large sums of money involved and when you are convinced that it is an important project then the money is released.

"For example, I am president of the committee on the preservation of monuments in Leningrad. Each year I am able to get 10 million rubles ($15 million) from the government. Since this is all centralized we can direct these funds to the most important projects at hand."

Since 1964 Piotrovsky has been director of the renowned State Hermitage Gallery in Leningard — the building which was originally the annex of the Czar's Winter Palace — and he is one of the world's foremost authorities on the history and archeology of the Ancient East and the Caucasus.

On and off for 47 years he has worked in the Soviet republic of Armenia, in charge of excavations at the site of the Urartu kingdom near the capital city of Erevan.

Piotrovsky was careful to stress that the Soviet Union's major museums and academic institutions do not go in for any raiding of priceless artifacts belonging to the various republics.

"Each republic is the owner of its soil and everything in it," he said. "The owner of everything that is dug up at Urartu is Armenia, although the Hermitage gallery is given some of the objects that are found."

During his week in Victoria — on his first trip to Canada — he visited the Provincial Museum which he described as "really beautiful, very modern," with well displayed materials.

Was he surprised at the frankness with which the white man's suppression of native Indian culture is acknowledged and documented?

"The historical process is the historical process," he shrugged. But he said it is refreshing to see the attention now paid to preserving and reviving interest in native culture.

Piotrovsky said earlier this year the Hermitage Gallery staged an exhibition of paintings by the Group of Seven in which there was wide public interest, and some years ago there was a "really beautiful" exhibition of Eskimo art.

He expressed the hope that more such cultural exchanges will be possible.

A warm, charming personality who obviously loves to talk about his specialty, Piotrovsky told students at his final UVic lectures:

"If you are ever in Leningrad come straight to my office. If I'm not there just tell my secretary you're from Canada . . ."

DAMAGING TOXINS IN SMOKE IDENTIFIED

SEATTLE (AP) — A U.S. specialist on smoking hazards says toxins which cause women who smoke heavily to have premature babies have been identified.

In addition, heavy smokers can experience menopause earlier, said Victor Weingarten, director of the National Commission on Smoking and Public Policy.

Cigarettes are the "single largest preventable cause of death in the United States," Weingarten told a conference on policy alternatives for the control of substance abuse at the University of Washington this week.

He said the medical evidence on deaths caused by smoking is so overwhelming that the tobacco industry, which has publicly denied the extent of the hazard, is privately moving to develop less hazardous cigarettes.

The 1950s-style high-tar, non-filtered cigarette has almost disappeared from the market, he said. One reason for the abundance of low tar, low nicotine is the profit to be made from them. He said manufacturers can get more cigarettes out of each pound of tobacco when they lower the tar and nicotine content.

The profits are so significant that despite the $40 million cost of introducing a brand to a market already glutted with 120 different kinds of smokes, a new cigarette need capture only one per cent of the market to bring in $131 million a year in profits, he said.

Tobacco is the highest yield agricultural crop with a return of $2,222 per acre compared to the crop with the next highest yield, $576 for peanuts.

Given the economics of the cigarette industry, Weingarten predicts that smoking will not be banned whatever the health hazard.

But he suggested ways to prevent cigarette addiction in children.

He said city governments can pass and enforce anti-smoking ordinances, halt sale of cigarettes to minors and remove vending machines in all places except where they can be closely monitored.

Testing and Not 2,4-D Killing Okanagan Fish

KELOWNA (CP) — Dead fish are turning up in the North Arm of Lake Okanagan, but Mike Robinson, fisheries biologist with the provincial wildlife branch, said Friday that application of the herbicide 2,4-D to combat Eurasian milfoil weed is not the cause.

The herbicide was applied to a four-acre patch of weeds in the lake Monday, but the dead fish — part of a fish and wildlife branch experiment — are dying in untreated as well as treated areas.

"Unfortunately we've run into some bad luck and some of the species we've been experimenting with are susceptible to handling and temperature changes, and many of our test fish have died," Robinson said.

The branch is trying to determine if the milfoil is beneficial or detrimental to game fish and what effect removal of the weed would have on the fish.

Robinson said tests have showed that fish in the treated areas are still alive, and added that "it looks as if we are the culprits more than 2,4-D."

Karl Marsden, the biologist in charge of the provincial government's weed control program, said the North Arm of Lake Okanagan was the last major testing site with 2,4-D this season and emphasis in weed control has shifted to mechanical means such as an underwater dredge and a new roto-tiller.

Dual Water System Eyed

The Saanich Peninsula Water Commission will look into the feasibility of a separate water system for farm irrigation, aimed at providing cheaper water from wells and Elk Lake.

Three-quarters of the capital costs of such a system could be paid for by provincial and federal governments under the Agricultural and Rural Development Act, the commission was told Thursday.

Bill Webber, chief of planning and research for the provincial Water Rights Branch, said the remaining 25 per cent would be paid locally, with domestic users not charged and farmers perhaps paying an annual fee.

The commission plans a major trunk line up the Saanich Peninsula to bring an assured domestic supply within the next year or two.

But the cost of water to householders is expected to be in the neighborhood of $2 per 1,000 gallons a price which would make irrigating with it out of the question.

At present, residents and farmers north of the Saanich boundary are dependent on water from private and municipal wells, supplemented this year with a single temporary connection to the Greater Victoria Water District system at Beaver Lake.

The new water main will be supplied from the Sooke Lake watershed, source of water for the core municipalities.

That would leave the wells and possibly Elk Lake available for irrigation and commission chairman Jim Cumming said today his group would like to separate farmers wanting to irrigate from the domestic system because the water cost would be too high.

Cumming said the commission was told there is a system along these lines being used in the Okanagan. Regional engineer Norman Howard will report in two weeks on who to approach for financing a study.

PNE Cries Poor At Rent Hearing

VANCOUVER (CP) — Rental arbitration hearings between the city and the Pacific National Exhibition ended Thursday with the city asking an annual rent of more than $650,000 and the exhibition insisting it can not afford to pay more than $1 a year.

Arbitrator Allan McEachern is expected to submit a binding decision before Aug. 31 on how much rent the exhibition should pay on the city-owned fairgrounds.

Layering: An Easy Method Of Increasing Your Plants

GARDENING
jack beastall

Layering provides an easy means of increasing a number of flowering, foliage and fruiting plants. It is a term used for a form of propagation in which branches or stems are rooted while still attached to the parent plant.

It occurs naturally with many plants in the wilds, so we can honestly say the gardener only puts into practice one of nature's methods of reproduction.

Early "gardeners" were quick to copy this natural way of increasing plants, and writers having access to old documents believe it to be one of the earliest forms of propagation, superceding the use of cuttings by many centuries.

In all forms of layering a portion of the plant is treated to encourage the formation of roots without detaching it from the parent plant. Throughout the rooting period the layered portion receives nourishment from the plant of which it is still a part, and this is the main difference between a layer and a cutting. The cutting is completely severed from the original plant and has to maintain itself until roots are produced and working.

It is not surprising so many gardeners find layering such a successful way of propagating their plants. There is no need for a greenhouse or coldframe, nor is artificial heat required. The layer is made right beside the parent plant in the open garden and left there until the roots have formed before being detached and set in another part of the garden as a new plant.

The one drawback to layering in this age of speed is the length of time it takes for a branch to make roots, sometimes as long as three years, but the process can be speeded up a little even though most layers of woody plants are left a full year before being separated.

It has been determined that when the flow of sap is checked roots form more quickly, and some gardeners still use the old practice of binding a piece of wire tightly around the branch where it is placed in the soil. But other ways of effecting a check in the flow of sap are in general use today, and these include bending the branch sharply, cutting a notch to half sever the branch, or by giving the branch a half twist while it is held tightly in both hands.

All these operations result in damaging the fibres and breaking the bark which results in the formation of a healing skin over the wound, called a callus, from which roots usually start as from the callus formed at the base of a cutting.

The equipment needed for layering is a sharp knife with a thin blade, a pair of stout gloves if the plant has thorns, a hand trowel, some screened compost and sand well mixed, and some layering pegs. These pegs, originally made from wood, are now replaced by pieces of wire 6 to 8 inches long, bent in the shape of grandmother's hairpins. They are forced into the soil over the branch to keep it from moving during the rooting period.

The easiest plants to start with are the bramble fruits. Any long cane can be tip-layered by digging a small hole about four inches deep, filling it with the 50-50 sand-compost mixture, removing the leaves for the top four inches, and pressing the tip into the soil mixture, and holding it with a pin.

The soil mixture is always firmed around the layer and must be watered occasionally. Brambles can be done at any time in July or August, and the young plants can be severed from the old cane in spring when growth starts coming through the soil.

Border carnations are the next easiest to handle. These can also be layered now, or at any time during July and August. Choose a strong and healthy plant, loosen the soil slightly around the base, then select strong basal shoots, not the thin straggly growths. Bend the shoots down and scrape away a little soil where the centre of a shoot touches the soil.

To prepare the layer, remove all the leaves from the centre portion that will be buried under soil, leaving five or six pairs of leaves at the top of the shoot.

A slit is then made at a point half way along the shoot where a pair of leaves was removed, or, to use the correct term, at a node. The cut starts a half-inch below the node and goes in as far as the centre of the stem, then along the centre line through the node to one-half inch beyond.

This leaves a tongue on the under side of the stem while the other side remains complete and attached to the parent plant. The pointed end of the tongue is cut off square.

A little of the sand-compost mixture is placed where the soil was scooped out, the cut portion of the stem placed on the mixture and held with a wire peg. Bend the shoot upwards so that the tip leaves are above soil level, and pack more soil mixture firmly around the shoot. Kept constantly moist, roots should form in six to eight weeks, but the layer is left attached until new growth is evident in the late spring.

The same general process is followed with all soil layering. In the case of woody shrubs such as azaleas, rhododendrons, and our many spring and summer flowering shrubs, use the lower branches that can be easily bent down to the soil and secured there.

On these woody shrubs, grasp the branch with one hand each side of the point that is to go into the soil, and twist the branch the same as you would to wring out a wet cloth. Do this until the bark loosens and splits.

The younger branches, or younger growths at the tips of older branches, will root more readily than old stems. Always have the ends with the leaves attached clear of the soil.

Shrub layers are usually made during July and August, but can also be done in spring. In either case, they will require 12 months to make good roots and be ready for severing from the parent plant.

One Policeman For 8 People

AYLMER, Ont. (CP) — This small town of 5,000 people must be high on the list of "no-go" areas for criminals.

At present it has no less than one policeman for every eight residents.

It's hardly surprising that there is little serious crime here. But Mayor Forest Moore claims that this is because Aylmer is a quiet, little town, not because there are 591 policemen "on the patch."

In fact only seven of the policemen are paid to keep the peace. The others work for or are students at the Ontario Police College located on the north edge of town.

The college was established here in 1962 on the site of an old air base and contributes as much to the economic well-being of the town as it does to its law-abiding image.

Students attending the college come from 128 police forces in the province, including Metropolitan Toronto and the Ontario Provincial Police. Most of the 90 staff live in Aylmer and many of them are former police officers.

At one time the police students were much in evidence in Aylmer because the old air base offered few recreational facilities after hours.

But now there is a modern $27-million campus with all the amenities of a self-contained community.

About five years ago there had been talk of moving the college from Aylmer due to a lack of proper facilities. The building of the new campus laid these fears to rest.

"It would have been a big loss to our town to lose the college," said Mayor Moore. "It's one of our biggest employers."

College administrator, James McLoughlin, said most of his students were probationary constables carrying out 15 weeks of basic training.

Most of the instruction for probationary officers takes place in classrooms. It ranges from how to address a judge in court, to writing reports and even how to assist at an emergency birth.

Physical training includes water lifesaving, foot drills and weapons training.

Every five weeks a class of probationers return to their forces to put their training into practice on the streets.

During their stay at the co-educational college students all have private rooms. There who need a break from the textbooks can make use of indoor and outdoor pools, two licensed lounges, playing fields, two gynasiums and a library.

Living Standards Threat From Mexican Birth Rate

By JOSE KATTOBACK

MEXICO CITY (Reuter) — In Mexico there is a popular saying that women, like rifles, should always be kept loaded and in a corner.

This sexist statement characterizes the Mexican version of machismo—male superiority in everything, especially sexual matters—and underlines the difficulty of trying to control the country's burgeoning population.

Concerted government efforts to curb population growth began in 1974 with the passage of a law instituting family planning programs. A year later, Congress passed a constitutional amendment declaring the equality of men and women before the law.

Demographers say some progress has already been made in the governments' campaign to cut population growth.

They estimate that in 1976 about 200,000 live births were avoided, thus lowering the birth rate to 40.5 from 45 per thousand and the population growth rate to 3.2 from 3.5 per cent per annum.

However, some social welfare agencies predict that Mexico's population will still rise to about 135 million by the year 2000 from the present 63 million.

This high population growth will have severe repercussions on Mexico's social and economic development.

The pressure exerted by population growth can already be observed in education, health, housing and employment. Recent statistics show that about 40 per cent of all Mexicans are undernourished and less than half the adult males in towns have full-time jobs.

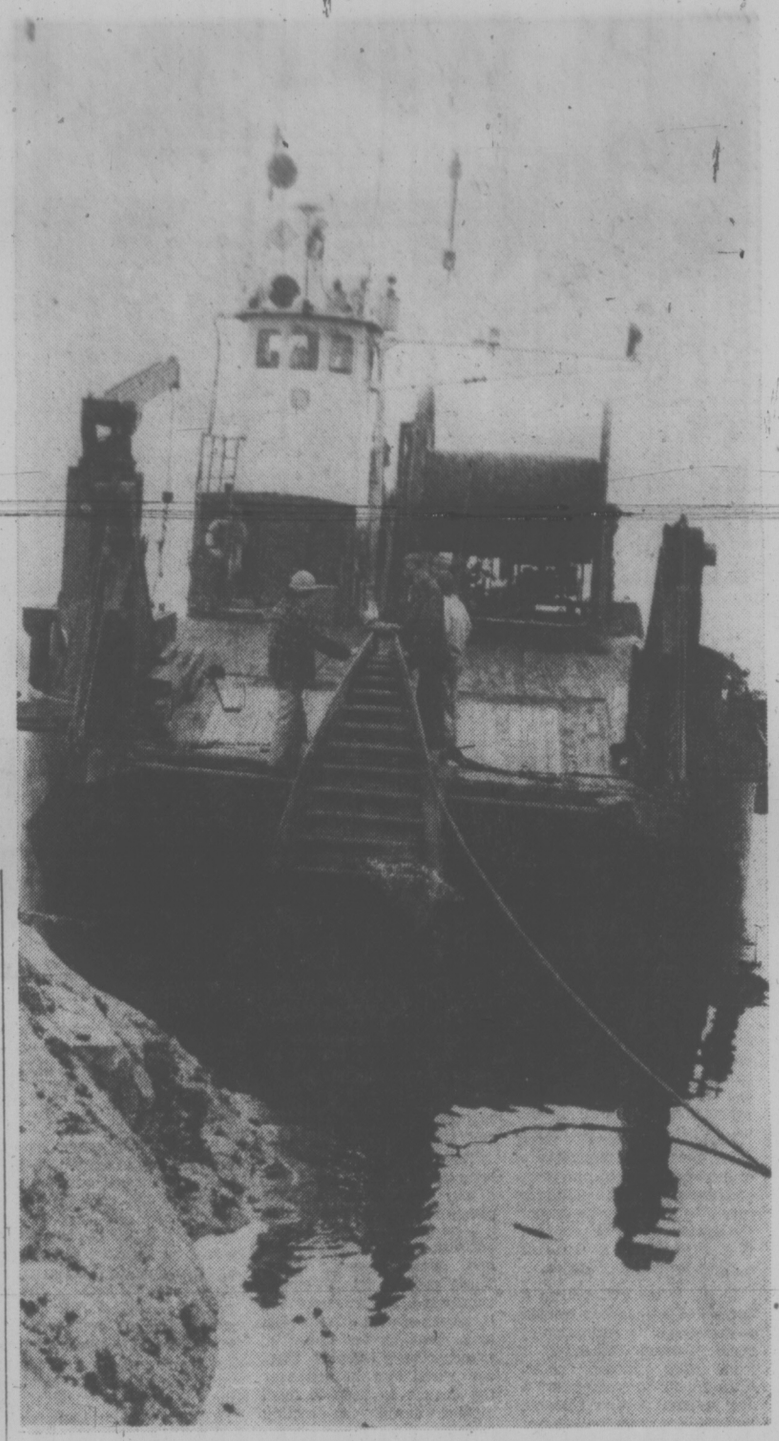
The government is even considering liberalizing its tough laws on abortion despite stiff opposition from religious groups.

Most politicians, wary of the power of the Roman Catholic Church, argue that the mere reduction of the country's birth rate cannot be accepted as a substitute for economic development.

Abortion in Mexico is only permitted when the pregnancy is the result of rape or when at least two doctors agree that continuation of a pregnancy threatens a woman's life.

Official statistics indicate women undergo illegal abortions each year and 30,000 die in such operations.

Asked why she risked the possibility of up to six years' imprisonment for aborting her pregnancy, a mother of four in a recent interview published here said: "I don't consider it a crime. It's more criminal to bring children into this world and not feed or educate them properly."



UNDERWATER CABLE is being installed by the B.C. Tel crew in $90,000 project to expand communications at CFB dockyard. The underwater section across Esquimalt Harbor is three-quarters of a mile long and is part of three miles of new cable being installed in Royal Roads military college area.

He Was Just 'Enthusiastic' for Sex

LONDON (Reuter) — A decision by three judges to free a young soldier convicted of a brutal sex attack on a 17-year-old girl has unleashed a furious reaction over the treatment of rape and other sexual offences in British courts.

Eighteen-year-old Tom Holdsworth, a soldier in the elite Coldstream Guards, met the girl one evening last summer at a holiday resort in eastern England. After walking around the town he led her into a park and tried to force her to make love.

When the girl, barmaid Carol Naggs refused, he attacked her, tearing out her ear-rings, breaking one of her ribs and causing severe internal injuries.

But when Holdsworth appealed against the three-year jail sentence he was initially given for the attack, three judges freed him with a suspended six-month sentence. They explained that he was a good soldier who had simply "allowed his enthusiasm for sex to overcome his normal good behavior."

In the subsequent furore over this apparent leniency, demands have been made for the judges' dismissal, a court has been invaded and London memorials have been plastered with slogans.

Holdsworth's release last month and the bitter comments made by his victim, Miss Naggs, to the national press were the catalysts for simmering discontent about police and court handling of such cases to boil over into hostile reaction.

A group of left-wing Labor members of Parliament called for the immediate dismissal of the three appeal judges. A few days later military memorials throughout London were daubed with slogans such as "women against rape unite."

When one of the appeal judges, Lord Justice Roskill, next appeared in court for a routine case, the sitting was broken up by women chanting "do you know what it feels like to be raped?"

Miss Ruth Hall, the U.S.-born leader of the women-against-rape movement, said afterwards that the attitudes of judges, police and doctors were all the same.

"The idea they have is that any woman who has been raped is in some way responsible for the rape, that it was her fault. And they have the idea that only a certain type of woman is raped. If a woman is on the pill, for instance, that is supposed to mean that the rape is not so serious."

But it is not just the feminists who are angry. In an editorial entitled "contempt of court," The Times condemned the judges for treating the offence so lightly and for apparently giving Holdsworth preferential treatment because he was a soldier.

The judges gave as their principal reason for freeing him that a long sentence would prevent him returning to the army, ruining a promising career.

The Times and other newspapers seized on the evaluation of a good army career as a powerful mitigating factor. The British Law Society's Guardian gazette commented:

"No doubt Judas Iscariot had an excellent record of service among the disciples, but questions of past service can hardly be decisive when it comes to considering the gravity of a crime. . . ."

Feminist and reformist groups have found plenty of other comments in the judges' summary to use as ammunition in their fight for tougher anti-rape laws.

As well as asserting that Holdsworth had simply allowed his enthusiasm for sex to overcome his good behavior, they told him he was not a criminal "in the sense in which that word is used frequently in these courts."

It was in reference to this and the Holdsworth case that Labor parliamentarian Jack Ashley denounced the "inexcusable male chauvinism" of British judges and called for a minimum five-year sentence for rape.

The reformists have already scored some notable victories.

Last year a law pioneered by Ashley introduced anonymity in court for rape victims. It also banned questions on their past sexual activity, thus precluding a common technique among defence lawyers of seeking to portray the victims as promiscuous.

The changes were designed to encourage more women to press charges over rape offences, more than two-thirds of which go unreported, London police said.

Last Relics of Colonial Lifestyle in Ndola Club

By ALAN COWELL

NDOLA, Zambia (Reuter) — It is 7 p.m. in the panneled bar of the Ndola Club, one of the last relics of a colonial lifestyle which has largely died in Zambia.

A black waiter in a white jacket walks through, tinkling a tiny bell, not, as one visitor thought, for dinner, but to tell clients that they now must be "suitably" attired.

This means preferably a lounge suit with tie; at worst, a safari suit and cravat. Later, dinner is served in a candle-lit dining room that prides itself on producing fillets unobtainable elsewhere in Zambia.

The diners are mainly white, as they have been since the club was founded in 1958. The menu has not been changed in 10 years. "Up here," a local businessman said, "you sometimes think the clock has stood still."

The private clubs of Ndola and the surrounding copper belt—source of most of land-locked Zambia's foreign exchange earnings—are the backbone of social life for the thousands of whites concentrated here, mainly in the mining industry.

Few are as exclusive as the Ndola Club, and all have multiracial membership rules. To their critics, some stand as symbols of the gin-and-tonic life of white colonial settlers. Mining sources say it is an existence that is attracting fewer and fewer newcomers.

Those that are prepared to stay are mainly white farmers and long-term residents who feel they could never match their standard of living back home despite irritants like shortages of consumer goods.

The mining industry as a whole is short of 1,300 trained foreigners because expatriates, frightened off by Zambia's proximity to the guerrilla war in neighboring Rhodesia, are not enticed by uncompetitive salaries, shortages and limited professional incentives.

President Kenneth Kaunda has persistently pursued the goal of a multi-racial society in Zambia, in sharp contrast to the white-minority rulers of Rhodesia.

As an example, he has pointed to the fact that, earlier this year, a South African-born white farmer, Arthur Piers, 49, became the first white to be elected to the 225-seat national assembly.

Only occasionally do examples of overt racial conflict surface, often in clubs in the copper belt, where miners and farmers before independence in 1964 threatened to fight to the last man rather than see a black government take over.

"There is generally harmony," a white journalist said. "You can usually share a joke with a Zambian." In Lusaka, 200 miles south, black and white mix freely in social and sporting clubs.

But undercurrents of suspicion persist. In one club here, conversation was hushed when the barman was within earshot. In another, members run a volunteer service among themselves, taking turns behind the bar, so they cannot be overheard by outsiders, informed sources said.

When a reporter went to Piers' farm to interview him, two plainclothes policemen mysteriously turned up a few minutes later to question him about his identity, travel plans and the purpose of his visit to the farm.

They asked to be present when the interview took place.

The aspirations of Zambia's whites vary sharply.

Some, like Piers, believe they can help solve the country's problems and say they do not see the issues at stake in black-white terms, but in terms of Zambians of all races working together. Others have more materialistic motives.

Informed sources say expatriates on contracts are permitted to send home up to onethird of their gross salary in hard currency, and up to $3,825 per child for educational fees each year.

In addition, most contracts provide for a gratuity of up to 25 per cent of salary when the foreigner decides to return home. It is taxed at a low rate.

However, salaries are not regarded by many expatriates as competitive, and income tax is viewed by some of the better-paid foreigners as steep. Many who have left Zambia over the last two years have headed for the high, hard-currency salaries and favorable tax conditions of the Middle East.

"I have been here 23 years," a European resident said. "I stay because no one pushes me around, I live better than I would at home, the weather is good and there are no problems of pollution, overcrowding and so forth."

A NATURAL ALTERNATIVE

Apartments, condominiums and cookie-cutter style sub-divisions appear to be the order of the day. But for many people these accommodations just don't add up to the lifestyle they want for their families. Dean Park Estates offers a natural alternative. Three hundred and sixty-five acres of choice forested land. A view of the Gulf Islands in the sparkling blue Pacific, with Mount Baker for a backdrop. Beautiful John Dean Park beside the development offers three hundred and eighty acres where the whole family will enjoy the trails, the woods and the land. Just twelve miles from Victoria off the Pat Bay Highway, Dean Park Estates is only two miles from the airport or the shops in Sidney, and only four miles from Swartz Bay.

Conveniently located, beautifully situated where stately evergreens abound. An orderly and aesthetic development where all aspects will be carefully controlled to ensure the protection of your home and investment. Dean Park Estate provides "Greenbelt Living" at its best.

Come on up to Dean Park Estates, a twenty minute drive from Victoria through the rolling green farmlands of the Saanich Peninsula, via the Pat Bay Highway. Turn left on McTavish, then left on East Saanich Road, drive half a mile and look for the sign and stone gate on your right.

First there was the land.

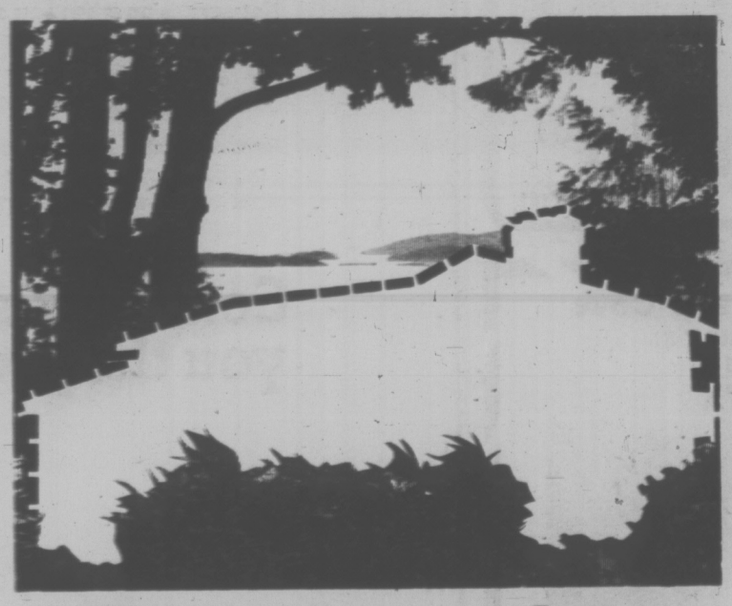
In 1921, John Dean, a well known "fascinating eccentric" donated eighty acres of land which formed the basis of John Dean Park. This park, with its myriad trails and opportunity for the whole family to experience Vancouver Island in the wild, is a strong factor in favor of Dean Park Estates.

Barrett Montfort, known throughout Canada for his shrewd land investments and his ability to recognize prime real estate, became interested in Dean Park in the early 40's when there were plans afoot to log off the beautiful areas surrounding the original park.

Over the years, Mr. Montfort bought approximately five hundred acres of adjoining land, and donated about one hundred and seventy to increase the size of the park itself.

For the rest, he envisioned an orderly and beautiful development—perhaps a "second Uplands".

Today, fifteen years after his death, his dream of a prestigious development on the Dean Park Estates can become your reality...and your home.



The concept evolves.

Not only is the concept of a fine development evolving at Dean Park Estates, but the house concept on each lot evolves as well.

When you own one of the large lots on the development (each one is over a minimum one-third acre), it's up to you to choose the contractor—and the time you build.

And to ensure the protection of your investment, each house plan will go before an approving panel so that all houses in the growing community will complement each other. The removal of trees and other vegetation will be considered carefully, so that the concept of your new home at Dean Park Estates will indeed evolve in harmony with the land and the community.

The range of sites and settings at this unique residential development is unrivalled. There are many choice properties with striking views across the Strait of Georgia to the Gulf Islands and distant mainland mountains, or through splendid stands of timber to the checkerboard farmlands of the Saanich Peninsula.

The final stage in the evolution of a home in beautiful Dean Park Estates. First there was the land. Then the concept of your home evolves in close relation to the land and the community. And at last a new, beautiful reality emerges. The picture takes form.

At Dean Park Estates, we believe many families like you and yours will welcome this opportunity to get involved—to take an active role in the creation of your home.

At Dean Park Estates, we recognize that selecting the right home for you and your family may be one of the most important and carefully thought out decisions you will ever make. We think the experience should be more than selecting a ready-made structure in just another sub-division. We invite you to come watch your family grow in the growing community at Dean Park Estates.

Got a dream home in mind for you and your family? Come make the picture take form at Dean Park Estates.

Once 'Most Wanted' Parties with King

MADRID (Reuter) — Six months ago Santiago Carrillo was Spain's most wanted man. Now, after having been arrsted and briefly jailed, he is invited to King Juan Carlos's parties.

The 61-year-old Spanish Communist has obtained legal recognition for his party after 40 years of Francoist persecution and established it as the country's third-biggest political force, winning more than 1.6 million votes in the June 15 election.

But the way he gained such support has earned him the wrath of the Kremlin, which considered him one of Moscow's most faithful followers during the 1936-1939 Spanish Civil War.

The Soviet Union recently made him the target of the most bitter personal attack ever launched against a Western Communist leader. It used language which since the Second World War had been reserved for "heretics" like President Tito of Yugoslavia and China's late chairman Mao Tse-tung.

The official Soviet foreign affairs weekly New Times accused Carrillo of "crude anti-Sovietism" and of damaging relations between Moscow and Madrid Communists.

What provoked the Kremlin's anger was Carrillo's 218-page study, Eurocommunism and the State. The book was published last April, but the Soviets waited until after the Spanish Communists had won nine per cent of the votes in the election before attacking it.

Carrillo organized the first full Eurocommunist summit when he brought French Communist Leader Georges Marchais and Italy's Enrico Berlinguer to Madrid last March. His book applies not just to Spain but to all countries where Communists believe in independence from Moscow and a democratic path to power.

Eurocommunist and the State talks of "socialist totalitarianism," attacks the Soviet invasion of Hungary in 1956 and of Czechoslovakia in 1968, criticizes Lenin and to a certain extent rehabilitates Trotsky and the late Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev.

But although Carrillo says the Soviet system did not become more democratic after Stalin's death, he praises the Kremlin's foreign policy as "progressive."

What made Carrillo draw away from Soviet influence were events like Tito's expulsion from the Cominform in 1948, Krushchev's denunciation of Stalin at the 20th Congress of the Soviet Communist party, the crushing of the Hungarian uprising and the invasion of Czechoslovakia.

He gives one of the reasons for adopting Eurocommunism as the realization that the rigidity of the Soviet system is leading Moscow up a blind alley from which Western parties would have to rescue the world Communist movement.

A Communist party subservient to Moscow stands hardly any chance of coming to power in the West and still less of holding it, Carrillo said.

Carrillo's plan for gaining power by Eurocommunists combines the establishment of what he calls democratic controls over key sectors such as the press, education, justice, the church, trade unions, the security forces, the military, the civil service and the nerve centres of the economy with a policy of moderation aimed at conciliating the hostile classes.

Central to his theme is the periodic holding of elections, in which the property-owning classes would be allowed to form their own party or parties to represent their interests.

One of the most important steps in the Spanish Communists' rift with Moscow was their decision to renounce the Marxist principle of the dictatorship of the proletariat. Carrillo defines this as the transition period during which the political rights of the defeated classes are suppressed and says the formula is still valid for certain underdeveloped countries.

In the book, written while Carrillo was in hiding from the Spanish police last year, he stresses that renouncing some of the principles of Marxist-Leninism does not represent a betrayal.

"We are not holding out a hand to decadent imperialism, but rather trying to accelerate its liquidation. We do not in any way give up the possibility of achieving power through revolution if the ruling classes bar democratic means to us and if a set of favorable circumstances arises."

But conscious that the Republicans' defeat in the Spanish Civil War was followed by a long right-wing dictatorship, he cautions against repeating old mistakes.

A revolution using force might work in a developed country, given a favorable international situation, as long as a decisive part of the armed forces supported the revolutionaries. Unless victory were quickly achieved, however, the great powers would become involved and the consequences could be disastrous.

The Communists stressed a moderate approach during the electoral campaign, avoiding anything that might offend the Roman Catholic Church, the monarchy or the security forces.

The Eurocommunist line has always been disapproved by the party president, Dolores Ibarruri, who recently returned from Moscow after 38 years in exile. But the political influence of "La Pasionaria" dwindled long ago, although, at 81, she remains a powerful symbol of the Republican side during the civil war.

Carrillo took care to announce the party's renunciation of the Republican flag and its willingness to recognize the monarchy at the head of a democratic government before her return.

Six Slain

MIAMI (AP) — Six men were killed and a man and a woman wounded Wednesday in an execution-type slaying in northwest Dade County, police said. Police found the six bodies lined up in bedrooms in house in the suburban Carol City area. The two wounded persons were reported in serious condition in hospital with gunshot wounds to the head.

School Aid Promised

Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm announced Friday that children whose parents receive welfare assistance will get more money for school supplies this year.

The stipend will increase to $20 from $15 for each child up to the age of 12, and to $32 from $25 for children over age 12.

"The amount is small, but the increase is an effort to keep pace with rising costs and to offer assistance in a preventative way."

The funds will not apply to children in kindergarten.

Little Liechtenstein

Principality at peace with world

By BETTY WALKER

By my new Swiss watch it was early morning in Zurich.

Time for a decision. Hire a car or leave the driving to someone else? Gas is not cheap — about $1.80 a gallon. And that did it.

A friend and I hopped a bus. Destination: Liechtenstein, a very small country nestled between Switzerland and Austria.

The two-hour ride was over Ricken Pass and through Toggenburg Valley, past green alpine farmlands and glacier lakes and streams.

Farmhouses, men and women working in the fields, soft brown cows wearing bells dot the mountainsides. The Swiss countryside is clean. All outside property must be kept tidy — that's the law.

In the Rhine Valley, where the river is calm, we crossed into Liechtenstein. No fuss with immigration officials or customs inspectors. No border formalities.

The tiny principality is at peace with the world. Recently, Swiss soldiers blundered over the border and were merely embarrassed by the mistake.

First stop was the Torkel Winery in Vaduz. We sat on the terrace sipping wine, looking out over vineyards and orchards to the surrounding Alps. A restful scene.

It is impossible to get lost in Vaduz, Liechtenstein's capital.

The one main street, a few blocks long, is colorful with flowers and flags. Hotels, restaurants, museums, shops, the post office and the National Tourist Bureau make it a centre of activity.

We heard that wood carvings, music boxes, local pottery, clocks and Swiss watches were best buys. While shopping, we saw a family purchase five watches and three clocks. Prices of some goods are less than in Switzerland.

Available at nearly every shop along the street, of course, are postcards — and the magnificent Liechtenstein stamps. At a sidewalk cafe we had coffee and pastries and wrote our cards. Across the street, the post office has the only mailboxes in town.

Prince Franz Josef II, the chief of state, and his family live in the 700-year-old castle perched on a hill above Vaduz.

The panorama: his country. He can see most of his 60 square miles — valleys and mountains, 11 villages and four cities. In the castle is the largest private European art collection, including 16th and 17th Century Flemish masters.

The prince's birthday, Aug. 16, is a national holiday, celebrated with bonfires, fireworks, parades, music, dancing and flowers, and free roast sausages and beer donated by the prince.

The country, population 23,000 has been independent for 250 years. The language is German; the culture and currency, Swiss. There is no airport. Austria Federal Railways owns and operates the rail system. The police force is small. There is no army — and the last soldier died in 1853 at the age of 93.

PICTURE PERFECT—A modern-day prince, Franz Josef the Second, and his princess, live in this fairytale castle of Vaduz, perched on a rock above the town of that name. They own one of the finest art collections in Europe, open to the public.

Cocos king's paradise in danger of takeover

Travel Tips

By Stan Delaplane

Late flash on the Keeling-Cocos islands: Where inflation never arrived, and prices are the same as they were 30 years ago. (Cigarettes: two cents a package.)

Australian newspapers call it the last Paradise. (Aussie journalists are cheery, beery, writers — I mean that as a compliment.) There are 27 islands. Fringed with coconut trees, drowsing in the warm Indian Ocean.

They are owned by John Clunies-Ross — the barefoot king of Cocos. The fifth of his family who has had them for 150 years. Now Australia says it will take over. Divide the land. Upgrade the feudal life of the 350 subjects. A do-good program for the natives.

Not so, says Clunies-Ross. Australia wants Cocos as a military air base. "The presence of a indigenous settlement on the islands is an embarrassment to their taking it over. To this end, Australia has used propaganda to denigrate and condemn the Cocos way-of-life . . ."

Clunies-Ross is going to the United Nations about it. Hopes Americans will support him. And you, too, might see the last Paridise.

"For a young man with no ambition for the demands of North American life-style, is there a place with simple living?"

The dreamy coconut island? Brown girls and flashing blue seas . . . A very few North Americans have made it in the French islands around Tahiti. A work permit means somebody must prove you can do something a Tahitian or Frenchman can't.

"And you have to work," an American resort cook told me. "That's the hell of Paradise. You simply can't live on fish and coconuts and breadfruit alone."

* * *

Hawaii — particularly Maui — drew a lot of barefoot-and-beads kids. They lived on the beach. Fished. Roasted breadfruit. And made moonlight raids on the pineapple fields.

Then they began to crave a change of diet. So they boosted a little packaged ham and peanut butter from the town markets. The police moved in. And the simple life became complicated.

* * *

I met two young men who set up barefoot housekeeping on a small island in the British Virgins. But they needed supplemental income too. So they sold their extra fish to resort hotels.

Result: The local fishermen — who sold their catch to the same hotels — turned them in as illegal aliens. The path to Paradise is not all primroses.

"We'd like a week in a typical English town . . ."

I spent some time in Ludlow at the Welsh border. Nice river. Old castle. Pleasant weather. The hotel is The Feathers. It opened for business in 1600 with a welcoming sign:

"Fine newe timbered buildyne, open to receive guests.
"Dinner at noone, supper at five, served by comelye and "Complyante wenches."

* * *

Good simple, heart food. A snug pub with polished brass beer pulls. Good side trips into Wales and a good walking town.

* * *

"I know France is supposed to be expensive. But we'd like to spend a week in Paris. A really wonderful week, even if we blow all our money . . ."

I'd start with a room at the Plaza-Athenee — they spend three times as much on flowers as they do on electricity.

Dinner at Maxim's just to wallow around in royal, expensive history.

The best of everything — and never mind the cost — is in a book you should buy: Paris on $500 A Day. The book will cost you $9.95. The advice will send you to the poorhouse with a pocketful of memories.

* * *

". . . a good country for poor but honest backpackers?"

I've picked up backpackers who give Ireland high marks. Good walking paths. Good hitchhiking. Lots of small inexpensive places to eat. What's wrong with it? "The rain," said a couple of soaking French girls I scooped off the roadside. "You must always have your eyes open for possible shelter. There is so much rain."

Rich or poor visit depends on numbers

LONDON — A part of Britain's heritage is at stake because of thousands of sightseers, says the Council for Protection of Rural England. Under threat is Hadrian's Wall, which marks the northernmost permanent frontier of the mighty Roman Empire.

The council was criticizing the government-backed Countryside Commission's suggestion that tourists should be encouraged to go to the less well-known parts of the wall to relieve some of the tourist pressure concentrated on the middle section. This would double the annual total of about 750,000 visitors to the wall.

Council director Christopher Hall argued that there is a case for ensuring that some parts of the wall remain obscure.

The council also objected that the commission made no attempt to discuss whether "it was better that a few people should find a relatively rich experience by visiting the wall, rather than many people a more shallow experience."

SERVING VANCOUVER ISLAND FOR 10 YEARS

We increased our fares this fall and are still nearly 5% less than some companies who didn't increase their fares at all. We are nearly 15% less than some who did. Now that is what we call fighting inflation. A-1 accommodation, top quality, air-conditioned, rest (excuse the pun) room equipped busses. Fully escorted and all the extras that our customers have grown to expect from us. So we continue to thank everyone who has called as a result of our first few endeavors with display advertising. It makes us realize that word of mouth is fine, but unless you are known, what do people have to talk about. Our second bus to California/Nevada is filling rapidly and our Reno-Lake Tahoe 8-Day Tour busses are now full for October 8th. We would add more, but the kind of accommodation we like is not available at this late date. Because of your phone calls, our September 24th Tour has been extended to an 8-Day Reno-Lake Tahoe. Those people who have already booked on the original 7-Day Tour will be given the additional day at no extra charge.

Following are some of the more frequently asked questions given to our agents:

ACCOMMODATIONS—We have stayed at the New Lakemill Motor Lodge in Reno for the past two years. We have used these accommodations because our customers were happy with the location and convenience to the Downtown Strip. Now that the Motor Inn is being renovated, they are delighted. Going to and coming from Reno, we stay at the International Marion Dunes, at Salem. This allows us an extra amount of shopping time on the return journey. Plus the fact it is top quality accommodation.

MEDICAL COVERAGE—Coverage for all our tours is optional at a minimum cost of $3 per person. As so many of our customers, especially to the North of the Island, have their own extended Medical coverage, we did not think it fair to add it to the price. Your agent will ask if you wish this coverage when you book.

For your information, the following are the tours we will be sending this coming fall:

Should you be in an area out of the local phone range of one of our agents and you wish to enquire about one of our tours, call our Nanaimo Office collect and information will be mailed to you direct. To the lady who inquired as to whether we owned the rest facilities along Interstate 5 — "No Alice, we only borrow them." Keep those calls coming in. Incidentally, we are putting another bus on for our New Years Party Tour to Reno. We have to admit, people sure think ahead.

Meo tribe study in anthropology

By NINO LO BELLO

CHIANG MAI, Thailand — If you're the kind of tourist who's been everywhere except on the First Charter Flight To The Moon, you may first want to try your hand at something entirely unique right here on the Planet Earth.

How about paying a call on the Meo hill people, a primitive tribe in northern Thailand, who are indeed a colorful relic from the past and who, anthropologists believe, will vanish from the face of the globe before the 21st century is half over?

Bear in mind the mysterious Meo living as an isolated mountain community, a 30-minute bus and jeep drive from Chiang Mai, are not native actors propped up as a show for curious visitors — but actual people doing their daily thing in their own life style right there in their own village.

Getting to this tribal enclave is something to write home about. You start out on an ordinary bus up to the point where the paved part of the road ends. Then, once transplanted to a sturdy jeep, you follow the world's bumpiest uphill road on the most bone-jarring ride of your life. Though it might take an hour, some folks prefer to return on foot.

Unlike Thailand's five other hill tribes, who are suspicious of intruders and believe in spirits, the Meo are never suspicious of anyone, trust everybody and are friendly. By now they have become used to strangers visiting them and willingly pose for pictures, no matter how busy they are with a chore. Although they are citizens of Thailand, they are not Thais, having originally come down from southern China during the First World War, fiercely holding onto a distinct culture that resembles neither that of Thailand nor China.

Daily work scene among Meo hill tribe

Leading a simple life, the Meo live in open-shack, thatched homes which have three walls and no windows. Because each shanty houses about 20 people and there is no fourth wall, the Meo do not have any privacy either among themselves or from their neighbors. Shabby as they seem, the houses also serve as a barn, rice-mill and storeroom.

Once in the village, you notice that all the men dress exactly the same. Having shaved their heads, they leave a bunch of hair at the centre of the pate. Their daily clothing consists of black-cloth trousers held up at the waist by a sash of red cloth sewed with three lines of green, black, yellow or white thread at the edges.

Except for some casual farming the men do very little most of the day because they believe their women are stronger. For instance, you'll see Meo females with their long-handled axes cutting down trees and walking back to the house with piles of wood on their back and head. At one time the primary occupation of the hill women was the cultivation of opium until the Thai government said no.

Although she works many times harder than the men, the hill woman takes joy in all her work and is most happy when she can do three things at the same time — like sewing with her hands, working a rice-grinding machine with her feet and carrying a baby on her back. While attending to their chores, Meo mothers never leave their children; a child either rides on mom's back while she works or walks wherever she goes.

More than anything, Thailand's hill people value silver, caring not one whit for gold. Accordingly, they wear an abundance of earrings, buttons, rings, bracelets and necklaces made of silver. Fashioned with intricate designs, necklaces seem to be a first priority, so that a one-year-old child will already be wearing his first. As children get older, more necklaces are put on, and in many cases by the time a girl is ready to get married she may have on her person a half dozen to a dozen silver ones — which she wears day and night.

ON THE GO with Jerry Hulse

JACKSON HOLE, Wyo. — Here it is, our '77 guide for avoiding the vacation-inflation blahs.

The word, confidentially: Try the Tetons.

In the nine years since I last wandered into Jackson Hole and Grand Teton National Park, little has changed.

Particularly the mountains. Breathtaking? You bet!

More importantly, Grand Teton National Park remains one of America's more reasonable vacation buys.

Nature purists settle in at Colter Bay Village, a piney encampment sprinkled with tent sites, rustic cabins and trailer spaces. Best, they've got Rent-As-You-Go camping.

Rent-As-You-Go, as perhaps you've guessed, is designed for the city dweller who wouldn't know a tent stake from a grub stake. Nine dollars a day provides a cabin for two, complete with bunk beds, a wood-burning stove, built-in patio grill, tables and chairs. For a family of four the rate comes to $11 a day. (Additional bodies can be slipped in for an extra $1 per person.)

What's more, the same purveyor will supply cooking utensils, camp chairs, extra cots and sleeping bags.

With prices like these, what vacationer can afford to go home again?

For less adventurous souls, Abe Lincoln-style log cabins are up for grabs at $12 to $17 a night, double.

Larger cabins rent for $27 to $35 a day, and should the occupancy rise above four guests the headmaster collects an extra $2 per person that day. No charge for youngsters under 18 sharing a room with a parent.

Do-it-yourself campers — the outdoorsy types who arrive lugging a trailer home — get spaced out for $6 a night, including sewer, water and electrical outlets.

Destined for economical family vacationing, Colter Bay Village features a coin laundry, grocery, gift shop, a chuck wagon-style restaurant, marina and pub foaming over with a dozen different beers.

While soiled clothing gets a washing in the launderette, campers can scrub in showers next door for 85 cents (15 cents extra fetches both towel and a bar of soap).

Down the block the Chuckwagon Restaurant serves cowboy beef stew — "all you can eat" — for $3.95 as well as trout fresh from the Snake River for $4.95.

Next door at the Colter Grill $1.65 buys a Tetonburger and chicken is served in a basket for $1.95.

Twenty miles south of Yellowstone, Colter Bay Village features lake swimming, boating, fishing and riding. A similar lineup of outdoor activities is provided at Jackson Lake Lodge, that spiffy enclave several miles to the south.

At Jackson Lake Lodge matrons with silver in their hair and newlyweds with stars in their eyes moon over a pictured windowed vista of the snowcapped Tetons — those magnificent mountains that seem so dramatically unreal.

With 385 low-rise rooms, rates at Jackson Lake Lodge start at $28 single and $31 double. Rooms in the main lodge face a portrait of peacefulness. No roads, no houses, no cabins. Only green mountains, the blueness of the lake and, framing it all, the Grand Tetons.

Green and white buckwheat carpet the meadow along with marsh marigolds, Indian paintbrush, lupine, scarlet gilia and columbine.

It's a scene that stirs the soul.

Other vacationers take up residence at Jenny Lake Lodge, off by the foot of the Grand Tetons, mountains which once led a visitor from Switzerland to exclaim, "An almost perfect replica."

Cabins at Jenny Lake Lodge are spread among a forest of pines. When the moon is full it swallows the earth; crickets call out, mountain bluebirds sing and chipmunks give chase to golden squirrels.

Such was the vacation setting chosen recently by Monaco's Prince Rainier and his princess.

It goes without saying that Jenny Lake isn't included in our guide for avoiding the vacation-inflation blahs. Not with rates of $80 a single and $90 double, even though breakfast and dinner are included in the cost.

The better deal is a four-day, three-night package back at Jackson Lake Lodge. Adding up to $148.20 per person, it includes shelter, eight meals, a tour of Grand Teton National Park and a six-hour float trip down the Snake River with lunch at Deadman's Bar.

Others gallop off on breakfast and moonlight rides (the cowboy breakfast — hot cakes, coffee, ham and eggs — is cooked over a campfire and figures out to $9, including the use of a horse for 3½ hours).

Other riders join vacationers at Triangle X Ranch, a 1,500-acre spread on the eastern slope of Jackson Hole. With a mind-bogeling view of the valley and the Grand Tetons, Triangle X provides fishing, hunting, pack and river trips. Weekly rates (per person) start at $205, including cabins, meals, horses and guides.

Banff Growth Under Attack

EDMONTON (CP) — The federal government's decision to expand the facilities at the Sunshine Village Ski Resort in Banff National Park is depressing, says an official of the National and Provincial Parks Association of Canada.

Dr. Ross Hodgetts, association president, said the decision indicated Warren Allmand, Indian and northern affairs minister, has "no feeling for what a national park means to people like me or our organization."

He added Prime Minister Trudeau will be asked to have Environment Canada make an independent study of the proposed expansion which will include nine new ski lifts allowing the number of skiers to increase to 6,000 a day from 2,500.

Hodgetts said Allmand has ignored conservationists' arguments against the expansion.

Their main fear is a new gondola will allow more summertime use of the Sunshine Meadows than the delicate tundra-like alpine area can stand.

Besides asking for an independent review the association will seek release of confidential reports on the expansion plan.

A report by Parks Canada's western region office was not among documents released by Allmand Saturday.

The report is believed to come down hard on the expansion but a Parks Canada official in Calgary said he doubted Allmand would release it.

The only thing developers didn't get was full expansion of the Bourgeau parking lot and denial of a new hotel. Some lifts also will be modified.

George Ennis, of Calgary, president of the Banff zone of the Canadian Ski Patrol System, which campaigned for the expansion, was happy with Allmand's decision.

He said ski facilities are over-used and expansion was essential.

Tony Ferguson of Edmonton, Alberta Fish and Game Association president, was angered by the approval.

He said Parks Canada officials are against stocking park streams on grounds it's an unnatural intrusion.

Yet they apparently see nothing wrong with building the massive lift and visitor support system a ski resort needs, he said.

Calgary Police Want Recruits

CALGARY (CP) — City police have been forced to look outside Alberta to find new recruits, says a police spokesman.

Insp. Doug Green, in charge of personnel, said in an interview the police force, which now has about 890 members, would not find enough qualified applicants from the area.

"The number of applicants each year is fairly constant, but it is the number of qualified applicants we are concerned with," Green said.

About 1,000 men and women apply annually to join the force.

But the rejection rate is high and, of the 1,000 applicants, only 100 will make it this year, he said.

Last year, the police force went to the Prairies to recruit possible candidates.

Advertisements in Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Regina yielded a flood of applicants and 16 new police officers, Green said.

This year, the recruiting program is being widened to include Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa.

"We are experimenting to see what the response is—and so far, I must say, the response has been good," Green said.

"We have had about 90 inquiries, either by phone or letter, since last week when the ads first appeared. It certainly looks as though it has paid off—though at this point, of course, it is impossible to say what we will end up with."

Attrition rate in the police department is about seven per cent, made up of retirements, ill health, and resignations. In addition to those numbers, extra police officers are needed to aid force expansion.

Fewer U of A Applications

EDMONTON (CP) — The number of foreign students applying for entrance into the University of Alberta has declined by about 16 per cent.

Figures released by the registrar's office indicate applications have dropped by close to 300 from the number received by July 1 last year. A total of 1,549 visa students have applied compared to 1,800 in 1976.

Assistant registrar Doug Burns said higher fees could be keeping some foreign students away but it's still too early to tell.

Red Deer Farms Fear Crop Loss

RED DEER (CP) — Many farmlands east of Red Deer face a major crop failure due to lack of rain, officials in the Hanna, Stettler and Coronation areas have reported.

Provincial and local government officials said many farmers have given up on some crops. Other crops need rain immediately to be worth harvesting.

The situation is worst in the Hanna area where at least 50 per cent of crops are not worth harvesting, said area fieldman Ivor Challman.

On the other hand, most crops in the Stettler and Coronation areas can be saved if rain comes within the next few days.

Andy Birch, Stettler District agriculturist, said although the situation hasn't reached the emergency stage, some fall rye and winter wheat fields have been plowed under because they aren't worth harvesting.

Grants Awarded

SASKATOON (CP) — Grants totalling more than $22,000 have been allocated to five groups wanting to participate in the provincial Cluff Lake uranium inquiry.

Highest grant recommended by Dean J. A. Brown, chairman of the board of inquiries review panel, was one of $8,000 to the National Farmers Union.

Gas Expanded

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta government program to bring natural gas service to rural residents, implemented 42 months ago, is well beyond the half-way mark.

The program, which has received $74.5 million in provincial government grants, has provided service to more than 37,000 homes in small towns, villages and hamlets and to farm and acreage owners.

Parent Aid

WINNIPEG (CP) — The provincial government has launched a $400,000 program to help at least 50 single parents, on social allowance and with dependent children, to train for jobs.

Larry Desjardins, minister of health and social development, said the program, which covers Winnipeg's inner-city area, is part of a general move to expand job training.

Pact Approved

SASKATOON (CP) — A one-year contract that includes a wage increase of 7.5 per cent has been ratified by about 300 employees of the Botash Corp. of Saskatchewan Cory Ltd. mine.

A mine laborer will receive $6.35 an hour to start, while a miner-operator will receive $8.50. Mill operators will receive $8.10, and journeymen tradesmen, $8.60.

FLAGPOLE MARKS JOKE

FORT McMURRAY, Alta. (CP) — A flagpole here is attracting hundreds of curious residents.

The steel flagpole towers 42 feet from its base in the driveway of Des Dwyer, a doctor, practical joker and part-time monarchist who left town last week for a brief vacation.

Dwyer returned to find that some friends, victimized recently by his practical jokes, had erected the flagpole in the centre of his driveway.

The pole is anchored in eight feet of concrete.

When the pole planting was complete, the "friends" decided the driveway lacked esthetic beauty, so they took in a truckload of topsoil.

They laid it on the driveway, sodded it, and placed rocks and flowers around the base of the flagpole.

Dwyer had his driveway paved only two weeks ago.

Cable TV Rejects Criticism

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Cablevision Ltd. disagrees with criticism from the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission that it has not paid enough attention to community programming, company president Stuart Wallace said Friday.

The CRTC comment was contained in its decision Thursday against a proposed link between the controlling group of Premier, Canada's largest cablevision company, and Western Broadcasting Ltd.

Its basic objection was that neither company had proved the transaction would benefit the public.

The commission referred to a continuing gap between certain Premier licence holders and the various community groups they serve.

Wallace replied that although there was a gap one or two years ago "it has been closing quickly." He said Premier will complain to the CRTC about the comment, adding that the commission did not say what would be of sufficient public benefit.

Long-Lost Airplane Discovered in Bush

PEACE RIVER, Alta. (CP) — Fish and wildlife officers in Northwestern Alberta have found the remains of a light aircraft which is believed to have crashed in 1958.

The officers were on a routine helicopter flight in he bush area about 50 miles northwest of here when they spotted the plane, which went down Sept. 8, 1958.

The aircraft, a Beaver, had been owned by Pacific Western Airlines and bore the identification markings IDCS-DJM.

The pilot and only occupant of the plane was Ken Bowlen, but no human remains were found at the scene.

The plane was on a forestry supply trip at the time and it is believed the pilot encountered heavy smoke from forest fires which resulted in the crash.

Two representatives of the federal transport department went to Peace River to complete an investigation into the crash.

Records Reveal Sea Heroine

NEW YORK (AP) — Mary Patten, called the Florence Nightingale of the Ocean, is one of the few women to have had their names inscribed in the annals of the sea, records recently discovered reveal.

For a girl of 19 to sail a clipper ship 5,000 miles around two continents through storm and frigid weather, her captain-husband and two other officers ill below deck and a mutinous first officer in irons, is one of the all-time epics of the high seas.

In 1856, Capt. Joshua Patten was assigned to sail Neptune's Car from New York to San Francisco. Below decks, as recorded in the historic "disaster books" of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co., was a cargo valued at $800,000.

At sea only a few days, Patten deposed his chief mate for mutiny and put him in irons. Malaria then felled the captain and his two remaining officers.

Responsibility for the navigation of Neptune's Car now rested on young Mary Patten, the records show. Faced with the decision to return to New York or continue the long trip to the West Coast, she ordered her crew to sail on.

On the ship's southward sweep toward Cape Horn the weather turned frigid. Rounding the cape in the dead of winter, the clipper ship shuddered in the stormy Antarctic. The insurance company's records show that only Mary's expert handling kept the clipper from capsizing in the heavy seas. When not at the helm, she tended her husband and the other sick.

After 55 tedious days, Neptune's Car entered San Francisco harbor. It was only after she safely delivered its valuable cargo that anyone knew that during the entire ordeal Mary was pregnant.

In recognition of her skill and courage, Mary was awarded several years' wages and many tributes. Among them: "Few shipmasters could have excelled Mary Patten in seamanship or as a navigator."

Anita No Longer Gay Joke

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — When Anita Bryant called her religiously-inspired crusade against homosexuality a "Save our Children Campaign," homoesexuals responded with the quip: "We don't want your children, Anita — we want your husband."

But it seems safe to say that after the 37-year-old one-time beauty queen won a landslide victory in Miami on June 7 to repeal an ordinance favoring homosexual rights, the homosexual communities of the United States no longer regard her as a joking matter.

Ray Broshears, president of the Gay Liberation Alliance, a homosexual organization headquartered in San Francisco, says: "Some gay people think Miss Bryant doesn't really believe is what she is doing. But that's not true.

"I have a great deal of respect for Miss Brvant. She really believes that what she is doing is right. And those are the worst kind."

Broshears claims that even before her Miami victory Miss Bryant was travelling the length and breadth of the U.S. successfully campaigning to get laws favoring civil rights for homosexuals either defeated or revokel.

Immediately after she succeeded in getting the Miami ordinance repealed she vowed to wage war on similar ordinances now on the books of 39 other cities and counties.

The immediate targets would be San Antonio, Washington, Minneapolis and the state of California.

The handsome brunete, mother of four and a Bible-quoting religious fundamentalist, said in Miami: "All America and all the world will hear what the people have said, and with God's continued help we will prevail in our fight to repeal similar laws throughout the nation."

In Miami, Miss Bryant campaigned against a county ordinance passed in January which would have prohibited discrimination in housing, employment and public accommodation on grounds of "affectional or sexual preferences."

She organized a public referendum aimed at repealing the measure and her referendum carried by a two-to-one vote.

Broshears says that since Miss Bryant began her campaign last January, she has also helved defeat similar measures in Arkansas, helped Texas and New Hampshire repeal sodomy laws and toughen laws against homosexuals and has had a homosexual rights measure thrown out in Maryland which was given a good chance of passage.

Although homosexual rights have been handed a string of defeats around the United St tes, Broshears thinks the major battle will eventually be in California.

After Miss Bryant's victory was announcel in Miami, thousands of homosexuals poured out of gay bars in San Francisco to start an impromptu protest parade.

San Francisco, a liberal city which rather enjoys an image of being slightly sinful, has a total population of 680,000, of which 120,000 are thought to be homosexuals.

City officials estimate that 28 per cent of the voting population is homosexual.

The city has had a law on its books since 1972 forbidding discrimination against homosexuals which is similar to the one thrown out in Miami.

It has homosexual schoolteachers on its school staff. Gay bars and massage parlors do business openly. A local gay softball team plays a police team each year.

Recently the city council went even further anl, in a move which vroviled fuel for Miss Bryant's campaign, passed a measure aimed at educating children to have greater tolerance for homosexuals rather than treating them with contempt.

This proposal called for the schools to "revise its guidelines on the family life prograf to réflect homosexual lifestyles and that materials be developed to teach respect for hufan liversities and complexities."

But Broshears say that if San Francisco appears to be fairly solid in its support for homosexual rights the res tof the state is not.

Most vulnerable to attack is a Californian law brought in in 1975 which permits any form of private sexual acts between consenting adults over the age of 18.

In a sign of the way the wind may now be blowing in California, Art Agnos, a San Francisco Democratic assemblyman, delayed his bill on a proposed ban on job discrimination against homosexuals after the upset in Miami.

He said Miss Bryant's victory had eroled suvport for his measure.

Broshears says his organization decided regretfully to launch a campaign to boycott Florida orange juice, the product which Miss Bryant advertises on television.

Dan Richardson, chairman of the Florida Citrus Commission, immediately announced there was no plan to cancel Miss Bryant's contract but said she might be dropped if her cafpaign against homosexuality hurt sales.

Miss Bryant earns $100,000 a year from the orange juice advertisements but she and her husband are believed to earn three times that from their joint entertainment enterprises.

Broshears estimates she now has a fund of $32 million provided in large part by religious backers. He thinks this will enable her to press her campaign on all fronts as the fight is joined during the coming months.

Lebanon Curbs Palestinians

BEIRUT (Reuter) — New control measures were being enforced today on the estimated 400,000 Palestinians in Lebanon in a major move to bolster peace.

Under the measures, which came into force at midnight Friday night, no Palestinian civilians may carry weapons inside their refugee camps and no Palestinian can go out armed or in uniform.

A few hours before midnight, the largely Syrian peacekeeping force intensified checks on vehicles and identity cards at road blocks in areas close to Palestinian refugee camps in Beirut.

The plan is designed to fulfil remaining parts of a 1969 agreement regulating the Palestinian presence in Lebanon. If fully implemented it would also stop fighting in south Lebanon where leftist Palestinian forces and Lebanese rightists have continued to clash since the end of the civil war last November.

High-level negotiations between Lebanon, Syria, the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and the 30,000-member peacekeeping force achieved agreement on the plan last Monday.

Under the first 15-day phase, beginning today, troops of the peacekeeping force will be posted outside 15 Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon.

Only the Palestinian military police will be permitted to carry weapons inside the camps.

Offices of Palestinian groups outside the camps will be closed.

The second phase covers the withdrawal of armed men from southern Lebanon and their replacement by Lebanese regular troops. This might induce the inhabitants who fled the area during the fighting to return to their homes.

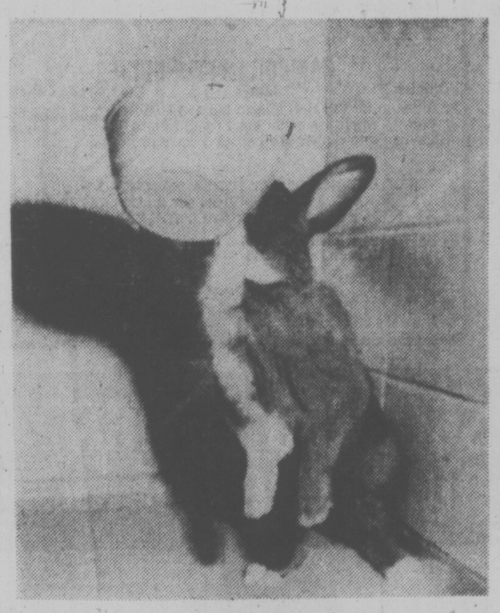
U.S. Judge Fines Rio Algom For Withholding Information

FUNNY BUNNY Harvey, demonstrates the old "feeding dish two-step" in his New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals cage, where he's lived since May after he had bitten six people. Harvey will be serving next Tuesday as guest umpire at a tennis match between Playboy bunnies and celebrities in Madison Square Garden.



WASHINGTON (CP) — A United States judge tried Friday to force a Canadian-owned company to provide uranium-marketing information that Ottawa has ordered kept in Canada. But the judge's punitive action soon was suspended to allow the company time to appeal.

In a case certain to have strong diplomatic repercussions, Judge Willis Ritter of federal district court in Salt Lake City imposed a $10,000-a-day fine on Rio Algom Corp. for every day it does not fulfill a subpoena ordering it to produce documents and have its Toronto-based president testify.

The documents and testimony are wanted for a court case that deals with the controversial 1972-74 activities of an international uranium cartel organized in part by the Canadian government.

The company quickly obtained a higher-court emergency order suspending the fine for 10 days to allow time to appeal. The appeal is to be heard Wednesday before three judges of the 10th circuit appeals court in Denver, Colo.

The case touches a sore point in Canada-U.S. relations. Canadian officials have strongly protested U.S. attempts to investigate the involvement in the cartel of Canadian companies with ownership ties to U.S. companies. The Canadian position is that such investigations are in effect attempts to apply U.S. anti-trust laws in Canada.

Rio Algom lawyer James Lee said in a telephone interview he told Judge Ritter that compliance with the U.S. subpoena would make the Canadian parent company, Rio Algom Ltd., and its officers liable for prosecution under Canadian law.

Lee said the companies did all they cvould to comply with the subpoena, but the Canadian government refused to allow Rio Algom Ltd. to take the information out of Canada. Recent Canadian regulations, created in response to the various U.S. investigations, prohibit removal of information on 1972-75 uranium marketing.

"We produced all other Canadian documents which fall outside of that law and that regulation," Lee said.

But the U.S. subpoena called for more, he said.

The man on the spot is G. R. Albino of Toronto, president of the Rio Algom companies.

Documents recently released by a congressional inquiry show that Albino, a former U.S. citizen who took out Canadian citizenship several years ago, participated in 1972 Ottawa and Paris meetings where the uranium cartel was organized. He was listed as representing Rio Algom Mines Ltd., another Canadian company.

Albino's lawyers argued that he is caught between U.S. and Canadian law. If he enters the United States, American authorities might decide to prosecute him for alleged violation of U.S. anti-trust laws.

If he testifies and produces documents, the Canadian government might prosecute him and his company. If he does not testify and produce the documents, there is the threat the U.S. fine will be upheld on appeal.

The lawyers also contended that the subpoena is not valid because it was not served on the U.S. offices of Rio Algom Corp. and not Albino.

Lee said the district court judge treated the U.S. company and its Canadian parent as one organization.

"I think the court is saying there isn't any distinction between Rio Algom Corp. and Rio Algom Ltd. Rio Algom Ltd. is the parent or grandparent and owns all the stock of the company that owns all the stock of Rio Algom Corp. and that the officers are the same and the directors are the same.

"That's not completely true, but that's how the court views it . . . ."

Cartel members have argued that U.S. uranium buyers were not harmed because cartel arrangements specifically excluded the United States and because other factors made world uranium prices rise more than the cartel could have censed.

Carter Talks To Space

WASHINGTON (Reuter) President Carter has placed a recorded message in a U.S. spacecraft in the hope that any inhabited planet in the Milky Way may intercept and understand it, the White House said today.

The statement was recorded in electronic impulses, which can be converted into printed words, and put aboard a Voyager spacecraft, which the civilian space agency plans to launch Aug. 20.

The craft will conduct scientific studies near Jupiter, Saturn and Uranus and then is expected to travel aimlessly in space for up to a billion years.

The president's message says:

"This is a present from a small distant world, a token of our sounds, our science, our images, our music, our thoughts and our feelings.

"We are attempting to survive our time so we may live into yours. We hope someday, having solved the problems we face, to join a community of galactic civilizations."

Carter Commends Canada For 'Constructive' Role

WASHINGTON (CP) President Carter paid tribute to Canada on Friday for the "constructive role" that it plays in world affairs and expressed hope that Canada-U.S. co-operation on the international scene would increase.

In a statement made while he received the credentials of Canada's new ambassador, Peter Towe, Carter also said that "during the past six months I have had a most pleasant and productive association with Prime Minister Trudeau."

He said: "I have valued his counsel and the opportunity to exchange views on many challenging international concerns confronting both of our countries and our friends and allies, as well as the many bilateral issues that are a natural part of the uniquely close relations that exist between Canada and the United States."

After expressing appreciation for "the constructive role that Canada plays in world affairs," Carter said:

"We are happy to note the great extent to which the policies and actions of Canada and the United States on the international scene are compatible and mutually reinforcing.

"Co-operation between our two countries is of utmost importance in the search for solutions to the challenges facing us in the fields of security, human rights, disarmament, non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, world economic structure, energy resources, environment and food.

"We look forward to an intensification of this co-operation and a continuation of the constructive contribution that Canada has traditionally made in all these areas."

The president added that the two countries must also continue to improve their bilateral relations, building on "the mutually worked out system of managing our bilateral relations constructively through advance notification, early and close consultation and accommodation when possible."

Carter also pledged that his administration "will spare no effort to ensure a further development of this great friendship between two close neighbors and allies."

Ambassador Towe, in his formal statement, promised that Canada will make every effort to co-operate with the United States in international affairs.

Towe, a career diplomat who served two previous stints in Washington, told Carter that "solutions may often only be possible on a global basis."

"In meeting these challenges there is much that Canada and the United States can do together," he said.

Towe, 54, succeeds J. H. Warren, who had predicted before leaving that his successor would have a more difficult time than he had.

'How To' Wiretap Manual Not What Gov't Ordered

WASHINGTON (WP) — The White House paid a private research firm $47,000 last year to produce what amounts to a do-it-yourself handbook for anyone who wants to learn the art of tapping a neighbor's or business competitor's telephone.

The 13-page document is entitled "Selected Examples of Possible Approaches to Electronic Communication Interception Operations." But it might more aptly have been called "Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Wiretapping — But Were Afraid to Ask."

By following the easy-to-read, step-by-step instructions, the uninitiated can pick up the fine points of eavesdropping on phone conversations in "a residential area similar to that found in Northern Virginia." The manual also tells how these techniques can be adapted to tapping long-distance calls or even to extracting information being sent on a computer to a data processing centre.

White House officials involved in the project, which was initiated during the Ford administration, say they really weren't trying to bring the wiretapper's skills within easy reach of anyone who's handy with a set of tools. Instead, they insist, the original aim was to see whether the public needed greater protection from invasions of its privacy.

Somehow though, something got lost in the translation from idea to actuality. The result was what one of the officials involved candidly calls "a cookbook of electronic eavesdropping recipes."

The existence of this latest contribution to the literature on the federal government's fascination with wiretapping was discovered by Rep. John E. Moss (Dem. — Calif.), chairman of the House subcommittee on government information and individual rights. On Thursday, Moss wrote to the General Accounting Office, Congress' watchdog on government operations, and requested a full investigation of the circumstances that produced this "remarkable document."

Moss' discovery also poses some potentially sticky problems for President Carter's staff aides, who say they learned about the document's existence only a couple of days ago.

One White House assistant, who asked not to be identified, said there is general agreement the document should be kept out of circulation. But, he pointed out, anyone theoretically can get a copy simply by asking for it under the Freedom of Information Act.

He added that the problem would not be solved if the White House destroyed those copies in its possession. Several bootleg copies are known to be floating around outside the White House gates, and there's no telling how quickly they might proliferate in the age of the instant copying machine.

Tong Sun Park Charged in Suit

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — South Korean businessman Tong Sun Park has been charged in a multimillion dollar lawsuit of conspiring to illegally take over a local Korean food company.

Attorneys representing Jie Sun Park and the Korean Food Corporation also filed briefs Friday seeking injunctions barring Park or his agent from liquidating his assets before a trial is held.

Bella Coola Indians harvest oolichans in herring seine nets rather than traditional funnels

SALMON POACH THREAT

VANCOUVER (CP) — A federal fishery superpisor says that salmon poachers, who are killing spawning salmon for roe, are causing a serious threat to the salmon runs of future years.

Lyle Freeman is also concerned about poachers harassing federal conservation officers with gunfire during one of the worst seasons ever for illegal fishing.

He said there have been three shooting incidents in the past two weeks.

Fisheries officers were issued revolvers last year following similar incidents, but Freeman said they have not fired back at the salmon poachers.

He said much of the fish poaching is done by Indians who are allowed to catch fish for food all year, and added that many catches are being sold illegally to middlemen who move the fish to market.

"But I don't want to give the impression that only Indians are involved," he said. "Whites, too, are setting up sunken line nets at night throughout the Fraser system."

Traditions Fading in Oolichan Harvest

. . . finally recooked with hot rocks

Two researchers of Indian lore fear the art of making oolichan greae — an important source of food for the northern coastal native people — will die out within 10 years.

Dorothy Kennedy and Randy Bouchard of the B.C. Indian Language Project, who made a detailed study this spring on how the Bella Coola Indians manufactured the grease from the small fish, said fewer and fewer people are making the native delicacy.

"Dipping smoked salmon in oolichan grease to improve its flavor or pouring it over porridge, bread, vegetables and berries may soon be a thing of the past," said Kennedy. "The lifestyle is changing."

Fifteen years ago 15 groups of people manufactured the grease in Bella Coola. This year there were only three groups.

Kennedy also fears for the future of the species.

"New methods of netting the fish now make it possible to wipe out the species," she explained. "But this won't happen if the Indians can help it."

The oolichan, sometimes called the candle fish because it can actually burn when lighted, belongs to the smelt family. It frequents the coastal rivers of northern B.C. and is harvested by the natives for its protein-rich oil.

Kennedy watched the Bella Coola Indians manufacture the oil — an involved process.

"What a smell," she said. "Once I went to the supermarket and the people moved away. The Indians told me to wear old clothing. I threw them away when I left."

To make the grease the fish is placed in pits 12 feet long, 16 feet wide and three feet deep, she said. The eulachons are left to "ripen" in these from six to two weeks.

During this period the fish turn from silvery blue to yellow-brown but they don't fall apart. The eyes of the fish turn red and blood oozes out of the pit.

When the ripening period is over, the fish — 14 wheelbarrows at a time — are dumped into large spruce wooden boxes. They are cooked just below boiling point for three or four hours and mashed at the same time. Cold water is then poured into a box to bring the remainder of the oil to the top for skimming.

The oil is then placed in large pots and reboiled to remove impurities.

"About 100 pounds of oolichan makes one gallon of grease," Kennedy said. "The grease can be kept indefinitely if kept in a cool place."

The fish residue in the cooking pots, she said, is used by some people as a fertilizer or thrown into the river.

"I found the grease palatable, but I prefer smoked eulachan," she said.

Kennedy said watching schools of oolichan moving upstream to spawn is quite a sight.

"The school looks like black clouds in the water," she said. "It's an attractive small fish.

But she said the beautiful spoon-shaped canoes built specially for harvesting oolichons are no longer used in Bella Coola.

They were used as recently as 1970, but have been replaced by herring punts, she said.

"The funnel-shaped oolichan nets have also been replaced by herring seine nets."

These nets are so efficient that it is now possible to wipe out the species, she said.

"But the Indians are aware of the danger and make sure some escape to spawn."

. . . after cooking, grease is skimmed from huge cooking vat

Murder Cause Still Mystery—Survivor

CHILLIWACK, B.C. (CP) — Eleven days after Ed Menger fled for his life from a riverside park where his companions were shot to death by a stranger, the reason for the murders remained a mystery to him.

In an interview Friday, the only one he has given since the slayings, Menger recounted the terror of the July 18 incident that left his brother and two of his friends dead and a 16-year-old girl missing.

At about 8:20 p.m. that day, Ed, 15, his brother Bert, 19, Evert Den Hertog, 19, Jan Den Hertog, 16, and Leola Gulliker, 16, met a half-mile from the Den Hertog farm in the nearby community of Rosedale.

They decided to go to Ferry Island Park and drink beer on the banks of the Fraser River about half a mile west of the Rosedale-Agassiz bridge.

Ed said the party, in Evert's pickup truck, reached the park about 8:45 p.m. and parked in a clearing 30 feet from the river bank.

One theory was that loud music blaring from the truck's tape deck angered the killer but Menger said he could hardly hear the music.

He said he and Evert drank the most with his brother Bert hardly getting through a bottle. Leola also drank very little.

At about 9 p.m. one of Leola's cousins and another boy pulled up in a car and talked to the group for about 20 minutes.

After they left, Ed and his companions threw the empty beer bottles into the river and tossed rocks at them.

The shooting began around 9:45 p.m. Evert and Leola were sitting on the edge of the river bank. Jan and Bert were standing up, still throwing rocks at the beer bottles and Ed was down by the river bank.

"The first I heard was the roar of a gun," said Ed. "We all ducked instinctively. I looked up and I saw him between us and the pickup. He appeared to be aiming high over us with the first shot."

Ed said he thought the weapon was a shotgun at first because it had an unusually thick muzzle.

"He didn't seem to be saying anything," Ed said. "He could have said something but the roar of that .30-06 at 17 feet . . . Well, my ears were still ringing when I phoned the police."

Before the next shot was fired, Ed scrambled down the slope toward a clump of trees.

There were screams and more shots and Ed said he ran until he met four people who were hastily packing up their fishing gear after being frightened by the gunfire.

"They wanted to get away," he said. "They couldn't see what happened because they were round a bend in the bank but they were only about 100 feet from where we were."

All five got into a car and drove to a nearby farmhouse where Ed phoned the RCMP.

"At first I hoped it was just a joke . . . even when he fired the first shot, paper filtered down through the air as though it was a blank . . . but later when we found the cartridge and there was blood there, I knew something was awfully wrong . . ." he said.

Police are speculating that the rifle muzzle may have been wrapped up when the gun was fired and are looking for a man seen on a bus with what appeared to be a rifle wrapped in paper protruding from a back pack.

While waiting for police, Ed said he heard two trucks drive past the farmhouse, one of which sounded like Evert's.

Police arrived moments later and Ed showed them where the group had been. He noticed the truck was gone and then he found a spent cartridge.

It was not long before the police and tracker dogs found the blood.

Ed's father, Wolter, was asked how he felt towards the gunman.

"Nothing, absolutely nothing," he said. "I'm too full of the loss of my son and the other boys to feel anything else.

"People have told me they'd like to kill him with their bare hands . . . but no, that wouldn't bring Bert back."

The fall Amalfis are in at Munday's . . .

We always look forward to seeing Munday's new shipment of Amalfi shoes . . . and now that the sale is over, we were able this week to drool over them to our heart's content! . . . Sandals are still very much with us for fall . . . Three of these are "Joanto . . . a closed-toe sandal in taupe, brown or black suede with braided leather trim, high, slender heel . . . "Bibiano," . . . open toe with padded sock lining in navy or black suede with patent trim . . . and "Aviano" . . . sandal with a wishbone strap . . . Dark brown or black suede with patent trim, and taupe with brown calf trim . . . This also has padded sock lining, and a little lower and thicker heel . . . "Onteo" is a smart suede pump with graceful lines . . . Black, brown or grey suede with black leather piping . . . "Vanadio" is a dressy pump with quite a high, slender heel . . . piped down the front and around the vamp . . . Black or brown suede with self-piping . . . "Inchino," a high-fronted slip-on with medium walking heel, has a braided moc vamp . . . comes in navy, dark brown or black kid . . . "Cervetto" is another really smart walking shoe in suede with a distinctively styled leather heel . . . black suede with beige heel and piping . . . navy or dark brown suede with matching patent trim . . . Priced from $44 to $80 at . . . Munday's, 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

Sweaters for outdoors and in . . .

Sports enthusiasts will, we think, do the rave bit over some new hand-knit outdoor sweaters which arrived from Italy this week and are now in Eaton's Townhouse . . . Toasty warm, styled with real verve and imagination . . . one is white wool with a wide plain knit band hugging the torso and circling the sleeves . . . in contrast with the bulky stitch in which the rest of the turtleneck pullover is knit . . . Another is a wool, mohair and acrylic mixture in a rust shade . . . Boat neckline, and knitted-in design at mid-front and around the bottom and sleeves . . . A white wool and mohair turtleneck pullover has an attractive pink and blue design . . . Very feminine! . . . Some nice lightweight pullovers from France have turtlenecks and come in a good range of colors, priced at but $45 . . . while an Italian sweater with a big cowl neck is tagged at only $30! . . . Saw some new ultrasuede co-ordinates . . . Forest green and cranberry are the two newest shades, and there are jackets, etc., in these colors . . . We like the hacking jacket in chocolate brown . . . which has the popular elbow patches, side action pleats and centre vent in back . . . There are gauchos to match this, as well as in camel . . . Matching polyester shirts with the look and feel of silk . . . all with detachable ties . . Eaton's, Townhouse, 382-7141, loc. 367.

Everything for your needlework here! . . .

You honestly don't expect a store devoted to selling needlework supplies to be constantly coming up with something new and different . . . but that's what it's like at Christie's . . . We never go in but we don't latch onto something we consider worth telling you about . . . apart from all the regular things you've come to expect at Christie's! . . . Mrs. Low . . . who's usually pretty matter-of-fact about her wares . . . vouch-safed the information that the new stamped tablecloths from Austria . . . with their cross-stitch embroidery designs . . . are really the nicest thing she's seen for a long time, and she's certainly in a position to know! . . . So if you like doing embroidery, go pick yourself one of these! . . . We saw some new needlepoint canvasses we liked . . . "Four Seasons," from Royal Paris . . . "Queen Anne" and "Jacobean" from Penelope of England . . . And there's been a new shipment of tote bags, key rings, belts, eyeglass cases, tennis racket covers and various other such smaller things on which to work needlepoint . . . These make lovely . . . and much treasured . . . gifts . . . Can't you just see what a hit a tennis racket cover would make with a female aficionada? . . . Mrs. Low has another quite old quilt for sale . . . A pretty thing, with the dainty Dresden Plate design . . . Christie's, 830 Fort St., 384-8770.

Fabrics for fall sewing . . .

There's something about fall . . . and things for fall . . . which sparks our enthusiasm more than at any other time of year . . . and it was in this spirit that we wandered among the new materials in Eaton's Fabric Garden this week . . . We could just picture dresses made from the 100% wool knits unbelievably light and fine . . . in such pretty geometric and modern design prints in the dark and tawny colors of fall . . . 54" wide, and $15 . . . $12 to $15 is the price of the wool and nylon blends (80% wool) in solid colors and muted stripes and checks . . . Greys, browns, taupes . . . just the right weight for dresses . . . Another group is a little heavier weight . . . 85% wool . . . in a rather looser weave, with interesting arrangements of uniform stripes . . . Great for pantsuits or jackets . . . There's a big new shipment of Viyellas . . . lovely prints, plaids, stripes, authentic tartans suitable for clothes for every member of the family . . . simply ideal for children's wear because it washes so well, won't shrink . . . $8 per yd. . . . Also new 100% cottons . . . drip-dry and crease resistant . . . in lovely dark colors for fall . . . Prints and matching quilts . . . the latter perfect for jackets, long skirts and matching coats . . . $4.99 for plain cottons, $6.99 for matching quilts . . . If you've been trying to find white polyester and cotton eyelet embroidery . . . Eaton's now have some lovely patterns at $4.50 a yd. Ethel Carson: A Friend To All New Canadians

There's a program following the formal-official part of every Citizenship Court ceremony in this city, that remains a happy memory for all who take part.

Mrs. A. B. Carson, president of the Greater Victoria Citizenship Council conducts that program.

After a short introduction by the Clerk of the Court, she presents lapel-size Canadian flags to each new Canadian, along with a printed copy of O Canada.

Ethel Carson leads the gathering in singing the Canadian anthem and then offers greetings from the Council combined with good wishes for future happiness of the men and women who have just taken the oath of citizenship before a judge "and now will be sharing what Canada has for us all."

The Bible they hold in their hands, she explains, is a gift from the Canada Bible Society.

Envelopes they have been handed contain applications to become registered voters for provincial elections, she adds, and the filling out and sending in of those applications is "one of the privileges" they have just been granted.

She gives the names of various organizations represented at each ceremony, introduces important guests, invites the new citizens, their families and friends, to an informal reception and tea in a room on a floor about the Citizenship Court and finally, leads everyone in the royal athem — The Queen.

The program has been sponsored by the Greater Victoria Citizenship Council for some time now and with the social hour "is just the right ending to a very important afternoon for the new citizens," Ethel Carson tells you.

This is her "second time around" as council president, the first being from 1966 to 1972.

Because of those years as head of the Council she knows the important role it plays in the community, one that extends well beyond the citizenship court program.

It offers free interpreter service to all hospitals, institutions, the poison control centre, public health units or for any emergency where a language problem exists.

"We have 30 volunteer interpreters with a range of 30 languages and we provide transportation," Mrs. Carson explains. "We also give assistance to Manpower officials for particular needs."

At present the membership includes 43 affiliated groups (church, community and business); 49 representatives (one or two from affiliates); and 18 associate or individual members.

Council was formed in Victoria as a co-ordinating committee for new Canadians, within the Welfare Council, after the second World War.

In 1950 its name was changed to the present form and aims were stated as "to bring the various associations which are interested in any aspect of citizenship into closer relationships throughout an organized union."

During the 1950s, classes in English under voluntary teachers were started, first in the Immigration Building, (now many years closed) and then in Victoria High School, under sponsorship of the School Board.

Mrs. Carson . . . looking for help

In early years, council members attended naturalization ceremonies in the old Court House as observers.

Later, in co-operation and with the consent of the judge, they presented a short welcoming program in the courtroom immediately after court adjourned and always with a prominent citizen speaking to the new Canadians.

(Today it is the judge who addresses the gathering and if an important guest does speak, it is very briefly).

First coffee parties and the social hours were arranged in Eaton's private dining room.

After opening of the new Law Courts the gathering was changed to the YWCA on Blanshard Street, and when it closed, to Christ Church Cathedral Memorial Hall.

Now, of course, with the Court of Canadian Citizenship in its own quarters at 818 Government Street, "we have been given a room in the same building and we are all together in a very friendly atmosphere," Mrs. Carson points out.

Her association with citizenship council work goes back to 1960, when she and her husband came here to spend their retirement years.

A qualified teacher, trained in England and with many years of active experience in Ontario, it wasn't long until she volunteered to teach English to new Canadians at early night classes arranged by the School Board and later at Camosun College—a work she continued for 15 years.

Through this volunteer work she was named citizenship convener in Sir James and Lady Douglas Chapter of the IODE, followed by an appointment to the same convenership in Victoria Municipal Chapter, where one of her responsibilities was to represent that group in the Greater Victoria Citizenship Council.

During 1964 and 1966 she acted as secretary of the council and then went on to become the president.

When she first started to attend citizenship court ceremonies, every new Canadian stood alone before a judge to take an oath of allegiance. Today, the oath of citizenship, as it is now called, is said in unison.

During the days when ceremonies were held in a court of law no decorative effects were allowed. No flags and no portrait of the Queen.

In the Court of Canadian Citizenship, the Queen's portrait and the flags are both displayed.

What is needed now, as Ethel Carson sees it, is an awakened interest by the general public in citizenship court proceedings and the work of the council.

"Not only do we need larger audience participation at the ceremonies," she says, "but more affiliate groups and many more individual members to help in the work of welcoming our increasing numbers of new Canadians."

Membership fees in the Council are $2 a year for an affiliated group or $1 for an individual. Donations are also accepted for the refreshment fund.

Hot Doghouse Poor Idea

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: I just saw a chart that showed a hot doghouse should be painted white, because it's cooler. Don't you think that's a good tip to pass along to your doggie readers?—L. D.

DEAR L. D.: Certainly. And to dog owners, too. Unfortunately, a hot doghouse will still be an undesireable spot for a canine, no matter what the house's color. Of more importance for cooling it would be shade — either locating the doghouse so it's naturally shaded, or fitting it out with a poochhouse parasol, a sun umbrella, or whatever.

★ ★ ★

DEAR DR. MILLER: How can you put a fat gerbil on a diet? Whiskers, the fat one, is twice as heavy as my other trim male. Whenever he tries to jump on things, he never makes it. I've tried to give him less food, but then Whiskers eats it all and leaves the other one hungry. I've tried diet food, too, but he just eats more. What can I do to make him more slim?—P. K.

DEAR P. K.: Whiskers' weight reduction program must include less food. There's no way around it. To keep your slim gerbil from becoming the innocent victim of this diet, Whiskers needs separate quarters. You can then feed him a little less than the other one normally eats until he's lost his flab.

★ ★ ★

DEAR DR. MILLER: We're what you might call an allergic family — my husband, myself and Jeep, our dog. We're all allergy sufferers. I just had a neat new blood test done for allergy. I sure liked it better than the skin scratch tests. My husband doesn't need it right now, but I'm thinking of Jeep. Do they have blood allergy tests for dogs, too?—D. T.

DEAR D. T.: Considerable work is being currently done to adapt the Radio Allergo Sorbent test, called RAST for short, to dogs. This testing technique has numerous advantages over older methods but, unfortunately, it won't be available for Jeep, or other allergic canines, this year.

★ ★ ★

DEAR DR. MILLER: I have a Siamese kitten from a litter which had a hereditary condition called osteogenesis imperfecta. That's the spelling, I guess. She's such a lovely little cat, I'd like to breed her someday. But I wouldn't want her kittens to come down with the same thing. I guess they would, though, even if they had the best of care?—T.C.

DEAR T.C.: Osteogenesis imperfecta in man is a hereditable connective tissue disorder. In cats, however, this disease is specifically caused by calcium deficiency, and is evidenced by frequently crippling bone defects. If your cat and her kittens had an adequate diet (with adequate calcium in particular), the condition would not occur. I'm not suggesting, however, you try breeding her since, aside from the surplus cat population, her early bout with the calcium deficiency could have left structural defects (in the pelvis, in particular) which could preclude successful delivery of kittens.

Wanted: Greek Key Crochet Pattern

KNIT AND CHAT

By MAY E. MacLEAN

I have a request from a reader to locate "The Greek Key" crochet pattern. Apparently it can be used either as an insertion or as an edging. Mrs. Jean McInnes, Box 1023, Wingham, Ont., N0G 2W0 would be very grateful for a copy, she is even willing to return your original or pay for a photostat. Please write to her directly.

Another reader has sent in a little hint which I haven't had time to test yet. She says, "To whiten old lace, soak in sour milk before washing". And for the same problem, I read in a magazine recently, to "Wash the lace in mild soap and dry without rinsing. When thoroughly dry, wash again in the usual way, this time rinsing well before drying." As I say, I haven't checked either one, but perhaps other readers can tell me of their experiences.

If you are late with your "Spring" cleaning as I am, perhaps these few hints will help when it comes to your sewing machine. I find this is one item which often gets forgotten.

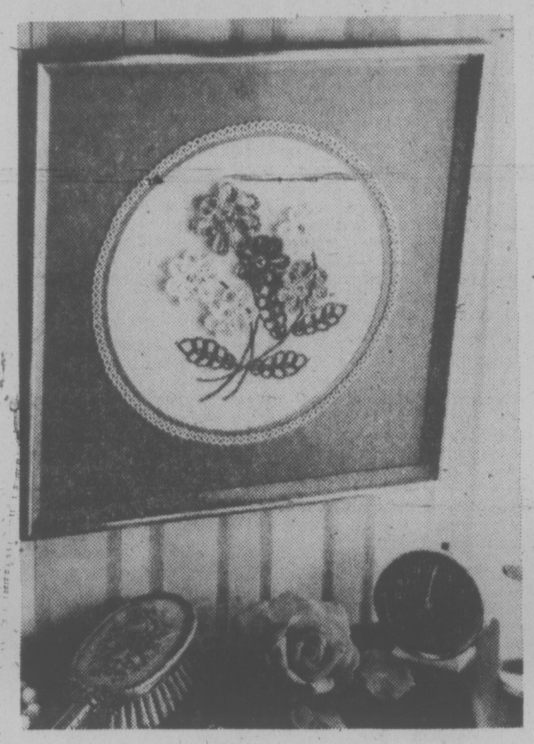
Use a good quality lightweight machine oil. Oil sparingly, but frequently. Do not contaminate drive belts, electrical contacts, or electric motor with the oil. It is particularly important to lubricate the shuttle, or sewing hook, depending on the model you possess.

After lubricating the machine, run a few rows on a scrap of material; this will remove excess oil and prevent any oil staining of a garment you will be making. It is best to lubricate the sewing machine at the end of your sewing day, leaving a piece of fabric under the foot overnight. However, do be sure to run those few rows on a piece of scrap material the next morning.

I always use a half-inch stiff bristled paintbrush which I keep especially for cleaning my sewing machine. Never use scissors or any sharp metal instrument for removing the lint which collects around the shuttle, as this can cause damage to the sewing mechanism.

If the lint is not cleared away, it can bend and even break the needle. A bent needle in turn can cause a miss or slipped stitching and fray the sewing thread resulting in breakages. These few hints can help you to smoother sewing and prolong the life of your machine.

So many readers have written asking for a tatting pattern that I am very pleased to be able to have this one in my series. A bouquet of tatted flowers will beautify any room, and they are so simple and quick to make, even the round frame is tatted too! If you so wish the picture can be finished as a round, or as illustrated, as a square using two colours of material for mounting.



The flowers are worked in three shades, and small beads or pearls are use for the centres.

To order Leaflet No. 7719, send 75 cents for each, PLUS a stamped self-addressed return envelope. If you do not have an envelope or stamp, please enclose an extra 25 cents to cover the cost of handling, and print you name and address. Send to May E. MacLean, "KNIT AND CHAT," c-o Box B, 486 Montford Dr., Dollard des Ormeaux, P.Q. H9G 1M6.

Please be sure to state pattern numbers correctly and to enclose your stamped return envelope for faster service. Allow about two weeks for normal delivery. All back numbers in my series are available, price 75 cents.

By LYNN and JOEL RAPP

Dear Lynn and Joel: I've been hearing about pH but don't understand what it means. What is pH, and how does it affect plants? — T.R.

Dear T.R.: Soil pH is a way of expressing the amount of acidity or alkalinity. The pH scale runs from 0 to 14. The zero end of the scale is the acid end, while the 14 is on the alkalinity extreme. The neutral point is 7.0, lower than that is acid and higher is alkaline.

Most vegetables, fruits and flowers do best on soils that have a pH of 6.5 to 7.0 — that is, slightly acid to neutral.

You can purchase a soil-testing kit or take samples of your soil to the agricultural department of your local college. pH most important to check your soil before planting; an extreme either way can be easily corrected. For acid-loving plants, you can add oak leaves, bone meal (for phosphorous) and dry chicken or sheep manure.

If the planting medium is perfect, you will be one step closer to realizing the benefits of all the work of a garden.

Common ¢ents

By KATE MacQUEEN

If you're counting on coasters to prevent heavy appliances from denting your new floor covering, don't use rubber coasters. Some types of rubber permanently stain light-colored flooring. But plastic won't stain it. Just be sure the plastic is thick and strong enough not to crack under all that weight.

It isn't often that you have to be concerned about your car having enough engine coolant in the radiator. After all, the coolant usually lasts a couple of years. But check it anyway, especially if you use the air conditioner often or if you pull a trailer. When the coolant level is low, the engine works harder and drains the battery.

RID HEMORRHOIDS WITHOUT SURGERY

your health

By LESTER COLEMAN, M.D.

Someone once told me about a rubber band method for removing hemorrhoids. I've been troubled with them and would like to find out more about this method. Is it considered an "operation"? — Mr. G.Z., Mich.

Dear Mr. Z.: This method was first tried about 25 years ago. It was discarded and now, once again, interest in this procedure has been revived.

With a special instrument that can be used in a doctor's office, rubber bands are placed around the hemorrhoids. Because they are so tightly applied, the blood supply is cut off and soon the hemorrhoidal tissue falls off. Most patients need to have their hemorrhoids banded about six times in order to get rid of all of them.

A large number of cases were tried at the Loyola University Hospital in Chicago. Dr. John Bartizal and his coworkers were impressed by the fact that there was so little discomfort associated with the procedure. Post-operative pain was virtually eliminated.

Dr. Bartizal says, "Rubber band ligation of hemorrhoids meets all the requirements of an acceptable alternative to hemorrhoidectomy (surgery) and, considering convenience, comfort and cost, it may well be a superior alternative."

The procedure is not a difficult one. Undoubtedly, doctors and surgeons in your own community are equipped to perform it. Consult your own physician for help in finding that doctor.

In the spring and summer I get painful cracks in the side of my mouth. Someone suggested this might be a vitamin deficiency. I can't believe this because I take lots of vitamins and, unfortunately, lots of food. — Mrs. L.N.

Dear Mrs. N.: There are many other reasons for persistent cracks and fissures in the corners of the mouth besides vitamin deficiency, which is probably the least frequent cause.

A far more common reason, especially during middle age and the older age brackets, is attributed to partial or complete dentures.

Wearers of these note that saliva accumulates in the corners and irritates the skin. Once these cracks develop it becomes difficult to clear them up without diligently working at it.

Dentures should be checked to be sure that they fit well. The crusting should be kept dry, and ointments should be applied at regular intervals. Sometimes doctors recommend ointments that contain cortisone or antibiotics.

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Vancouver local of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers has filed a writ for alleged slander against Progressive Conservative MP Ron Huntington.

In a writ filed in B.C. Supreme Court, local president Peter Whitaker and CUPW claim damages for alleged slander, defamation and innuendo contained in two radio broadcasts on May 6 and 16 this year on a CJOR open-line show.

They also seek an injunction to restrain Huntington, MP for Capilano, from further speaking, circulating, broadcasting or causing to be broadcast the said or any similar alleged slander, defamatory statement or malicious falsehood or innuendo.

10 Tips for Wives

DEAR ABBY: You are always so short and to the point. Have you a list of 10 tips for wives to follow if they want a successful marriage? — NEW BRIDE.

DEAR BRIDE: No, but I'll compose one.

1—Don't keep telling him about all the other men you could have married.

2—Don't bring out the bills at breakfast time.

3—Don't try to start a conversation with him while he's reading or watching a sports event on TV.

4—Don't correct him in front of other people.

5—Don't try to make him jealous.

6—Don't bad-mouth his relatives.

7—Don't put a shirt in his drawer with a button missing.

8—Don't call him at work unless it's absolutely necessary.

9—Don't use his razor.

10—Don't threaten to leave him unless you have a better place to go.

And next wek I'll print my 10 tips for husbands.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 41-year-old woman who was divorced last year after a miserable 20-year marriage. I get $800 a month alimony. I have one daughter who is 19 and away at college.

Three months ago I met a young man at a church singles' meeting and it was love at first sight. He's the most sensitive and charming man I've ever met. He says I'm the only woman he's ever loved, and in bed, on a scale of one to ten, he rates a ten.

He's recently divorced and has a four-year-old son living with his ex-wife. He moved here from the Midwest and is looking for a job.

Now the problem: He's only 27, but he's very mature for his age and says the age difference doesn't bother him.

He wants to marry me, but if I accept, I'll lose my alimony. I've considered having him move in with me, but it might cost me the respect of my daughter and parents which means a lot to me. What are your thoughts on this? — IN LOVE.

DEAR IN: The age difference may pose problems later on, but I see bigger problems now. Since he's unemployed, moving in with you might be a great move for him, but feeling as you do about your daughter and parents, I don't advise it. If it's love, it will last. Take your time.

DEAR ABBY: I am an independent grocer with a question for you. Why do some customers (including relatives) ask for groceries on credit, but when they have the cash they will drive an extra mile to shop at a supermarket and give their money to strangers?

The people they give cash to wouldn't give them groceries on credit if their whole family was dying of malnutrition. — FED UP WITH PEOPLE

DEAR FED UP: There are two kinds of people in this world: The givers and the takers. The credit customers (including your relatives) who spend their cash elsewhere are "takers." You may complain, but the next time someone is broke and needs groceries on credit, you won't turn him down, because you are a "giver." The takers may eat better, but the givers sleep better.

DEAR ABBY: A neighbor boy and I are pretty good friends, but he's never aksed me for a date. He's 19 and I'm 18. He is quite handsome and by no means shy, but he hasn't dated much. I'm a little bit overweight, but have been told that I have a pretty face and good personality.

The other night we were sitting on my front porch, and he asked me to get him a date with a good-looking girl. He said he could take a girl to the movies, hold her hand and talk sweet to her as well as any other boy.

Now, here's what I want to ask you. If I were to tell him that I could be taken to the movies, my hand could be held, and I would enjoy sweet talk more than some good-looking girl who hears it every Friday night, would he get the wrong idea? CINDY

DEAR CINDY: No, he'd probably get the RIGHT idea.

DEAR ABBY: How does one forget someone he loves? I can't seem to get over her. It's not true that time heals. The pain seems to be getting worse as the days and weeks go by.

I have even thought about moving to another city, but no matter where I go I'll see the kind of car she drives, and everytime I turn on the radio I'll hear the songs we both liked. I'll still think of her when I see her favorite color, or actor, or television program. She is on my mind constantly, even though there is no hope of reviving the relationship.

I know it would be best to forget her, but as long as there is still love (and there is, as much now as ever), is it possible to forget? Can you kill love? If so, tell me how. — PIECES

DEAR PIECES: You can't "kill" love, but you can let it die quietly from malnutrition. Don't permit yourself to dwell on thoughts of her. The moment they come into your mind, drive them out with another thought about something else. The less you allow "her" to live in your memory, the sooner you'll get over her.

The illustrated Lemon Macrame folder offers easy to follow instructions on how to make a simple fruit hanger from jute. To make your room or kitchen swell tantalizingly fresh, it suggests you use your handiwork for the storing of fresh lemons. Since lemons yield the most juice when they are at room temperature, you can use them directly from the hanger. Roll the lemons before squeezing.

As you replace them with new fruits, you may want to try some of the recipes the folder offers for good measure.

Incidentally, for those people who love the tart flavor of fresh lemon meringue pie, the helpful folder entitled How to Make Perfect Lemon Meringue Pie is available. Also, it offers instructions on how to make other citrus pies, including orange and grapefruit meringue pies. There is also a quick lemon pie recipe, which uses packed pudding and pie filling to which you add fresh lemon juice and peel.

Both folders are available from: Sunkist Growers Inc. 238 Ontario Food Terminal, 165 Queensway, Toronto, Ont. M8Y 1H8.

Three Concerts Left in Series

In the ongoing series of distinguished artist concerts in the B.C. International Festival, there are three Sunday gala concerts left, each of which promises to be a remarkable experience in the performance of great music.

At McPherson Playhouse this Sunday the Italian Quartetto Beethoven di Roma will be appearing again, this time to perform the Beethoven Quartet in E flat, Op 16. The program is in fact an all-ensemble affair.

The lovely Schubert Quartet for guitar, flute, viola and cello will be played by Javier Calderon, the guitarist from Bolivia; Canadian flautist Robert Aitken who ranks with the world's finest; Eberhard Klemmstein, viola, and Hakuro Mori, cello.

Two unusual items will be Chausson's Chanson Perpetuelle, which will feature mezzo-soprano Phyllis Mailing with the Quartetto and violinist Yuri Mazurkevich, while cellists Sachiya Isomura, Takeshi Mineta, Jo Kimura and Hukuro Mori will play the Klengel Cello Quartet.

Violin duettists Yuri and Dana Mzurkevich, who have already astonished and delighted festival audiences, will return to the program on the following Sunday (Aug. 7) and the incomparable double bassist Gary Karr will be featured, joining the Quartetto Beethoven in Schubert's "Trout" Quintet, teaming with violinist Ruggiero Ricci and later in the program with harpsichordist Harmon Lewis in a remarkable partnership that is world-famous.

All details of the Tuesday-Thursday concerts at St. Michael's University School were yet to be completed, but on Tuesday a Mozart work will be performed by baritone Richard Roland with Jean-Marc Rollez, double bass, and William Aide, piano, and a Paganini Trio by Calderon, Klemmstein and Mori.

Thursday's concert will include the Caesar Franck Quartet among other things. All concerts begin at 8 p.m. and tickets are available at the door.

Charming skater Grace Bradley is well named as she swoops about the ice like a white bird. The former Victorian, who now lives in California, will participate in a short performance by the Canada Ice Dance Theatre at the Racquet Club of Victoria, 3984 Gordon Head, Sunday at 3:30 p.m. The performance is being given in conjunction with the second annual Improvisation Competition. Contestants from centres throughout the Pacific Northwest will be skating. Competition will begin at 1 p.m. It is open to the public and tickets are $1.50 and $1 at the door.

Summer Festival Moves About City

The Victoria Summer Festival presented by Victoria Symphony Society, which began its series of 40 mostly outdoor concerts this week in Centennial Square, moves around the Greater Victoria area and beyond for its special Sunday concerts.

The first, this Sunday, will take place in the Oak Bay Recreation Centre's Roller Skadium. Conducted by Timothy Vernon, there will be two programs, one at 2:30 p.m. and the second at 3:45 p.m.

Music will include favorite light classics such as the Glinka Russian and Ludmilla Overture, Grieg's Peer Gynt Suite, Poet and Peasant Overture, a Strauss waltz and a Brahms Hungarian Dance.

Feature of the program will be the presence of guest artist Ruggiero Ricci, famed violinist who is appearing through co-operation of the Shawnigan Summer School of the Arts. Ricci will perform the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto in E minor and Saint-Saens Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso accompanied by the Symphony.

These two concerts will be repeated Monday in Centennial Square at 5:30 p.m. and 6:45 p.m. Wednesday's and Friday's concerts in the square and all subsequent Sunday - Monday - Wednesday-Friday concerts until Aug. 19 will be conducted by American guest conductor Gordon Munford. Vernon will resume the baton for concerts from Aug. 21 through 28 when the festival concludes.

A number of resident artists will be making solo appearances and from the distinguished Shawnigan faculty there will be guitarist Javier Calderon, double bassist Gary Karr and violinist Yuri Mazurkevich.

Broadway Showtime

Music from Broadway shows played by a 14-piece orchestra under direction of Howard Denike, prominent Victoria conductor and music educationist, will be presented Sunday at 2:30 p.m. in Beacon Hill Park's Cameron Pavilion. Popular Victoria singers appearing on the program include Helen Smith, well known as a singer-actress, especially for her lead role in Gypsy at the McPherson Playhouse last season; Peter Chipman, who will also act as emcee, and Victoria Operatic Society lead players Mary Bissenden and Bill Bowie.

Music to be performed will range all the way from Victor Herbert and music of the 20s to Jesus Christ Superstar.

The concert is free to the public through the co-operation of the City of Victoria and, Victoria Musicians Association and the Music Performance Trust Fund of the Recording Industries.

EXCITING MOMENT in the production at the Empress Hotel of the musical, Jacques Brel Is Alive and Well and Living in Paris, comes with the full cast on stage performing Brel's whirling, breathless Carousel. Liliane Stilwell, left, is one of the automatan like figures with Liz Gorrie as soloist. The show continues nightly through August and is done in cabaret style with the audience seated around tables.

Brel Alive, Well and Getting Better

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Brel revisted provides ample proof that a competent cast and alert resourceful directors who keep on top of a show can tighten, whittle, groom and polish until even a show that was pretty good at the start looks 10 times better three weeks later.

Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris continues to draw fascinated audiences to the Empress Hotel's crystal ballroom for the Allen Houghton-Kaleidoscope production running through Aug. 28.

Brel has a more pliant form now than it had on opening night. There is a flow that carries you forward, a mellowing and a deepening of the mood of some songs; intensity without the initial stress in others.

The five singer-actors are perfectly at home in the revue-style presentation of Belgium song writer Brel's emotional, sometimes humorous poetic philosophies and his haunting music, while the instrumental backing continues to be balanced, supportive and interesting.

An important point with this production is the wonderfully clear enunciation of all five performers. Every word, even at rapid tempo, articulated with clarity yet effortlessly and with a fine sense of phrase and meaning. It's an outstanding professional aspect of a polished professional performance.

Unfortunately many serious theatre students who are woefully lacking in this connection are not around at the moment to get the message.

It's also interesting that two songs sung in French, one by the lambent Liz Gorrie, the second by Toronto's Liliane Stilwell — of the group the most ideally cast as a French chanteuse — are among the best numbers in effective poignancy.

The second visit brings to the surface some reservations with regard to the costuming. Echoes of the Brel heyday as far as style is concerned are fine, yet certain values are lacking in areas of color and sensuousness. But for a first or return visit, Brel is definitely worth the effort.

One member of the cast, Donald Hunkin, leaves before the run ends in late August. Replacing him will be Toronto singer Victor Young, who has just concluded a leading role in the Winnipeg Interlake Festival.

Shooting Feature Film Is Easy Part

By AUDREY JOHNSON

What are the lures that would draw a person to choose a field of endeavor presenting a most complex range of problems, difficulties in financing, no guarantee on monetary returns, and almost inevitably a high percentage of disappointments and frustrations?

Perhaps it's the sheer challenge posed by such odds.

Or the fact that in this part of the world the particular field has not yet become overpopulated.

Perhaps it's because it represents for the creative artist a medium of unmatched freedom and virtually unlimited possibilities for exploration.

The field is film-making and the creative artist who inspired this conjecturing is Zale Dalen, writer and director of Skip Tracer, the only Canadian film included in the 15th annual International Film Festival now playing the Varisty Theatre in Vancouver with an overlapping start at the Counting House here this weekend.

Skip Tracer, a full length feature film, was made entirely in Vancouver with West Coast actors, technicians and crew, and with — deliberately according to Zale — no name star. It will be screened Friday and again Thursday, Aug. 11, at 7:30 p.m.

The festival will continue through Aug. 13 and includes besides the Canadian entry, films from France, Poland, Denmark, Italy, Switzerland, Australia and the United States.

So far the vibes are good for Skip Tracer. Those who have seen it are impressed with its technical smoothness, freshness of viewpoint and convincing performances.

Les Wedman in the Vancouver Sun says Canadian Film Development Corporation money has never been better spent in the west and intimates that if Skip Tracer doesn't make it no Canadian filmmaker is likely to succeed.

Skip Tracer is a man named Collins and his business is the distasteful but legal one of catching up with delinquet debtors and strong-arming them by any means other than physical violence into paying up. He's at the top of his unpleasant tree, enjoys the game, is proud of the ice-water in his veins and the one-way vision he has cultivated.

Dalen's script focuses on the moment when Collins realizes that his status is in danger, and a desperate attempt to retrieve the situation engages in a duel with a "skip" whose action brings the film to its climax.

The festival gives this Canadian film its world premiere.

Zale had done three years of organic chemistry at Simon Fraser University (his father wanted him to be a doctor), when he switched to fine arts. "I always wanted to be a writer."

The next influence was the film workshop at SFU which brought him to the decision that film-making was the medium for him. In 1970 he was working in Toronto and married to Laara, whom he had met in Vancouver when she was a law student at UBC.

Laara, who is producer of Skip Tracer, did not complete her law studies but worked for a law firm in Toronto and has applied her legal business knowledge to administration of film-making.

After working for 10 months for CBC in Toronto at the lowest level, Zale got a job as assistant editor to former Vancouverite Allan King, who was making feature films.

"I worked at every technical job from the ground up," says Zale. "You have to be capable of carrying out every process on the technical side if you are to be a film maker.

"We lived on one salary and saved the other until we had enough to buy a professional tape recorder and mike."

Cameras are generally rented, Zale explains. The price tag runs between $18,000 and $20,000 and as the shooting period is the shortest part of the process it is pointless for the independent film maker to tie up such an amount.

The making of a film falls into three phases. "We spent a year on the first — Zale writing the script and I looking for financial backing," says Laara. "Actually it took me three years to find someone prepared to commit themselves to the financing. The casting and other details took six months and the actual shooting was a matter of 22 days. It was finished in October last year."

The time since then has been devoted to cutting, editing and polishing the finished product.

The casting of extras was almost an embarrassment.

"We got one of the radio stations to announce that we were casting extras," says Zale, "and when we got to our place the next day people were queued up for nearly two blocks — and they kept coming. We had to SOS the station to stop the announcement. But we found some beautiful people that way; very good actors and technical people."

Among the hazards and problems that audiences know nothing about, the delicate matter of arranging shooting locations involving possible infringement on private property and reputations, and the serious business of insurance, rank high.

Insurance has to be carried throughout the shooting period in case of damage being done to houses, buildings, grounds or anything else.

"Once when we were doing a short film the script called for action on top of moving box-cars. The only company that would insure the actors was Lloyds of London and it would have cost us $10,000," says Laara.

"In a situation like that the production manager and producer have to attempt to get the script writer to change the scene. We did."

When choosing locations care has to be taken to avoid involving street signs in what might be a damaging way and all street scenes have to be done in full co-operation with the police.

Then there are unforseen hazards like the time the Dalens were making a short that included a dramatic railroad episode. Suddenly a bright orange-clad frogman surfaced from the nearby water and stood watching in full view of the camera. The scene had to be redone.

That may not sound too upsetting but when one is paying the cameraman a minimum of $250 a day, each wasted half-hour adds to the final cost. When Skip Tracer was being shot there was a scene in which an actor in a car had to draw up to the curb, jump out, buy some flowers and rush into a building.

Rehearsal of the scene went perfectly but when they shot it the caretaker had in the meantime locked the building door and another scene was ruined.

The Dalens returned to Vancouver in 1971 and have worked steadily at their profession since. There is constant research, constant filing away of facts and details that may be useful in subsequent projects.

Zale has done a number of short subjects for CBC and the National Film Board and he and Laara even tried their hands at a "spaghetti" Western that was definitely not a success, he says.

He has a production studio in Vancouver but the Dalens have no intention of trying to create an industry.

"All one really needs in this craft is a typewriter and a telephone," Zale says. "From there you can go anywhere and as far as your talents, imagination and technical knowledge will take you."

Freight Killed Shop

EDMONTON (CP) — In late April, Canada's Four Corners was an oasis of warmth and color in a downtown hotel, specializing in Canadian handicrafts and solid Canadiana pine furniture.

By the second week of May the mellow, golden pine walls had been stripped to reveal plaster and patches of dull grey-blue fake-brick wallpaper. The last piece of furniture—a massive pine cash desk—was being carried out by a local buyer and the few remaining items of unsold giftware were packed in cardboard cartons waiting to be shipped east.

The shop was killed by soaring freight costs and a poor economy, said owner Jack Cook of Ottawa.

The 54-year-old ex-Mountie, in town to help organize the closing of his only western retail outlet, was brisk and unemotional in discussing his reasons for closing the store.

"Business is a hard game," he said. "I don't take the closure as a personal disappointment."

Canada's Four Corners and its furniture companion firm, Pinecraft Ltd., have outlets in Toronto, Ottawa and the Almonte, Ont., site of the Pinecraft mill. The economy has affected business at these shops but they have not been as stifled by rising freight rates as has the Edmonton outlet.

"I tried to sell this store to somebody," Cook said. "I had it listed with two real estate companies here for a year, but this is a luxury business.

"Buying has slowed down, and a retailer like myself in a luxury business, not something like food or clothing, felt it first."

Cook said freight rates for sending pine furniture from Almonte, where it is made, to the West increased drastically in February, 1976.

"For example, take two night tables at $95 apiece. At one time we could ship them out here for $24; the cost has increased to $54."

Iran Just Three Years Away From Entering Atomic Age

BUSHEHR, Iran (Reuter) — Oil-rich Iran will enter the atomic age by the end of 1980 when the first of two nuclear power plants is due to be commissioned.

The second plant is scheduled for completion a year later.

The two 1,2-million kilowatt plants are being built side by side on the coast of the Persian Gulf by Kraftwerk Union Aktiengesellschaft of West Germany.

Called Iran-1 and Iran-2, the plants are the first of a total of 20 nuclear power stations Iran plans to build to produce 23,000 megawatts of electricity in 17 years at an estimated cost of $28 billion.

The country's rapid development has boosted demand for power well beyond existing capacity, with inevitable frequent power failures. To overcome the shortage, schemes are in hand to raise power output to 70,000 megawantts, about one-third coming from nuclear stations, by 1994.

An agreement is expected shortly with France's Framatone Co. to build two 900-megawatt nuclear power stations on the Karoun River, northwest of Bushehr, near the Iraqi border.

Construction of the German plants began in November, 1974, when the German company and the Atomic Energy Organization of Iran signed a letter of intent. The formal contract for the project was signed only last November.

Although the German company has built identical plants cheaper elsewhere, the concern says soil and earthquake conditions and infrastructure requirements at the site have pushed up the cost of Iran's nuclear plants.

Bushehr lies on an earthquake belt, but it has a comparatively low seismic record. "No serious earthquake has occurred in the area in the past 100 years," an atomic energy spokesman said.

Nevertheless, more concrete and steel is being used in the reactor buildings' foundations and outer shields not only to withstand quakes but also to guard against a phantom jet crashing with a full load of bombs on the buildings, officials said.

The German plants are being built on shell-strewn wasteland between two old fishing villages, Halileh and Bandargah, 12 miles east of Bushehr, which was Iran's largest port 200 years ago.

German officials say work progress is on schedule. The 184-foot spherical steel shell for the Iran-1 reactor building is half-finished, and work is continuing on the main structures, including buildings housing turbines and switchgears.

The concrete foundations of the Iran-2 reactor building have been completed and that of the turbine house has been cast.

All major civil construction work is expected to be finished by next year when the mechanical phase will begin.

For the 6,000 people, 1,500 of them West Germans, now working on the project it is harsh living in the hot, humid and dusty weather. Next year there will be 7,000 people.

There is, however, comfort in more than 300 terraced houses and bungalows — all air-conditioned—the West Germans have built in the camp.

Some 200 Pakistanis engaged in iron-works had previously worked on Pakistan's giant Tarbella Dam. There are also about 200 Yugoslavs and 200 Iraqi Kurds, who were among thousands who fled to Iran after the collapse of the Kurdish rebellion three years ago.

Some 400 expatriate families also live in the camp, which has a 40-bed hospital, seawater desalination plants of 3,400-ton capacity per day, a 32-megawatt power house and other amenities.

The domed nuclear plants when completed would appear to fishermen as modern mosques, but for Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi they will be landmarks of Iran's power in the strategic gulf.

Cuban Fish Fleet Making a Splash

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — To the nine million citizens of Cuba fish is an important part of the diet and the nation is making a strong effort to supply its own needs, says a fishing captain with the Cuban fleet.

Jose Sanchez, captain of the factory trawler Rio Cuyaguateje, brought his ship to St. John's recently for minor repairs and outlined the Cuban efforts in the industry.

Within the last two years, he said, the number of factory ships in service for the Caribbean republic has doubled to 50 and in addition to the strengthen deep-sea fishery, there is also an increased emphasis on the inshore fishery.

An agreement between Canada and Cuba signed last March gives Cuba the right to fish within the Canadian 200-mile economic zone and also establishes a framework of fisheries co-operation.

Under an accompanying bilateral agreement, Cuba is permitted to harvest 10,000 metric tons of fish from Canadian waters this year.

Sanchez, whose 350-foot vessel has facilities for processing, freezing and packaging the catch, said trawlers should be able to take the quota within two months. Most will be cod but some caplin, herring, redfish and halibut will be included.

Fishing is the fourth-largest industry in Cuba, Sanchez said.

"The total fish harvest is taken care of by the domestic market. There are no exports."

The concentrated effort since 1975 has netted Cuban fishermen about 70,000 metric tons of fish annually, mostly from South American waters, he said.

Weddings

McArthur-Bowles

A beautiful, spring wedding was solemnized on May 7, 1977, by Rev. John Travis, uniting Dennise Suzanne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bram Bowles, Victoria, and John George McArthur, son of Mr. and Mrs. George McArthur, Sooke, B.C., at Centennial United Church, in a lovely double-ring ceremony. The church was decorated in double French, deep purple and white lilac with yellow and white glads. A pair of her father's white doves added the symbol of peace and purity to the beautiful ceremony.

Dennise was radiant in her elegant, silk jersey Victorian-style gown, with fitted bodice and high neckline, fashioned with Chantilly lace yoke which was bordered with softly-gathered frills and rosepoint lace. The long sleeves were enhanced with deep-flared, lace cuffs, also trimmed with rosepoint lace, as was the A-line skirt and full train sweeping back from the waist. Dennise's embroidered silk illusion chapel veil misted from a high silk and lace head-piece embroidered with pearls. Carrying in her arms a uniquely-beautiful bouquet of double French, deep purple, lilac from her father's garden, and cream roses. She was given in marriage by her father, Bram Bowles. Maid of honour Cathy Land, and bridesmaids, Karen Denike and Vickie Rolston, wore blending, sleeveless V-necked, pastel gowns with ruffled shawl collars in pink, turquoise and mauve, daisy-patterened nylon. Tracey Horne, flower girl, wore an adorable yellow dress with lace-trimmed yoke and bonnet in matching material. Colonial bouquets of daisies and blending carnations were carried by the bridesmaids, while Tracey carried a wee basket of daisies. Bridesmaids wore daisies and baby's breath in their hair. The groom was extremely handsome in a candlelight tuxedo trimmed with dark brown velvet as was the ringbearer, his younger brother, Shawn McArthur. Best man, Bruce Kerr, and ushers Kim Bowles and Steve McArthur, brothers of the bride and groom respectively, wore camel tuxedos trimmed in dark brown. Mother of the bride chose pink, silk, jersey, trimmed with white, while mother of the groom was adorned in a pink multi-coloured gown. Both wore blending miniature rose corsages.

The reception was held at the Jaycee Hall with Mark Bowles, brother of the bride, acting as master of ceremonies. The hall was decorated in a spring garden theme with hanging baskets and rhododendrons in yellow, mauve, and pink, blending with the bridesmaids' gowns. The beautiful three-tiered wedding cake was decorated with a lilac motif, and topped with singing doves, carrying through the theme of lilac and doves. Brandy snifters with rhododendrons from home and flamboyants, decorated the tables. Mr. Bill Bowles of California, uncle of the bride, sang the beautiful song "Give Me Your Hand" during the signing of the Registry, and also proposed the toast to the bride. For something old, Dennise chose her grandmother's antique pearl and amethyst pendant. Dennise and John will be residing at Sooke, B.C.

Hamblin — Collier

A pretty wedding was solemnized June 24, 1977, in St. Luke's Anglican Church, officiated by Archdeacon Chas. Wolff, uniting Maureen Agnes Collier, daughter of Mrs. M. A. Collier and Mr. S. W. Collier of Victoria, and Larry James Hamblin, Victoria, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Hamblin of Estevan, Saskatchewan.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore her mother's wedding gown of ivory satin. It buttoned down the back, and featured high neckline and short puffed sleeves. Flowered appliques edged the lace yoke. She wore long white gloves. "Something borrowed," from a dear friend, was a fingertip veil, 75 years old, held by a crown of white flowers. She carried a bouquet of yellow roses and white mums. Attendants — her sister, Pat Collier, as maid of honour in a yellow and white flowered gown, bridesmaids, Marjorie Elston and Sandy Cheston in floral gowns of green and white, flowergirl Serena Bennett, in yellow and white. All carried baskets of yellow daisies. Headpieces worn by attendants and the bride were made by the bride's great-aunt. Ringbearer was Jeremy Gillespie of Calgary, cousin of the groom. Best man was Glen Hamblin, brother of the groom, and ushers were Warren Boles and Mark Newton. All wore tan tuxedos. Mother of the bride chose an aqua jersey ensemble featuring a matching lace jacket, while the mother of the groom wore a green and white flowered gown. Both wore corsages of white roses.

A reception was held at Gordon Head Recreation Centre; music supplied by Denny's Canned Music. The head table was colourful with a three-tiered wedding cake in yellow and white, with yellow and white floral arrangements. The toast to the bride was given by Reg Hooper, uncle of the bride. Mr. Tom Rogers was Master of Ceremonies. Out-of-town guests came from Vancouver, Calgary, Regina, Estevan and Up-Island points.

HOW TO WRITE

A GOOD

CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room etc., for rent, or property for sale: start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably when given complete, definite information. Always include the price in your adveertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. for you daily, Monday through Friday; 8:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

A Noisy Show, But Mulley Dozes

DONCASTER, England (AP) — The RAF put on such a loud tribute Friday to the Queen's silver jubilee that the monarch put her white-gloved fingers in her ears. But the droning jets put the defence secretary to sleep.

The Queen and Prince Philip craned their heads skyward watching the show at the RAF's Finningley airbase marking the 25th year since the Queen's coronation.

But Defence Secretary Fred Mulley, seated between the royal couple on the VIP reviewing stand, barely paid heed to the roaring engines of the jet bombers and fighters flying overhead in precision formation.

Second World War-vintage Spitfires and Hurricanes whined across the sky and Mulley rubbed his eyes.

A Lancaster bomber from the same era lumbered past and Mulley yawned.

When the helicopters chattered along, Mulley's head slumped on his chest and he settled down in his chair for a nap.

The Queen and Prince Philip appeared not to notice. But news photographers covering the RAF review caught the quick sleep and nearly every London newspaper carried pictures of the Mulley snooze in their editions today.

An RAF spokesman, commenting on the minister's nap, said: "He had a hard day. He arrived at the station quite early. Then he had lunch in the officers' mess. It was a warm, humid day. Perhaps that had something to do with it."

Many descendants of the governor are expected to attend, along with the public who are invited.

Stairway to Ocean At Pacific Rim Park

Pacific Rim National Park has constructed what is believed to be the longest wooden stairway on the Pacific Coast.

It has 196 steps starting from the crest of a 180-foot cliff and descending to Half Moon Bay at the extreme southeastern corner of the parks' Long Beach section.

The stairs were mainly built to provide access to Wya Point, adjacent to the bay.

The wild, rocky promontory with a spectacular surge channel and pools teeming with sea life is one of the most attractive areas of the park but seldom seen by visitors, according to park superintendent Frank Camp.

"It seems that people are so attracted by the seven-mile stretch of beach between Box Island and Wickaninnish Bay that they forget there are other parts of the park as interesting," he said.

Schooner Cove is another area which doesn't get too much attention.

"But most people who pay a second visit to the park, and there are many, usually get to know these areas," he said.

Park crews have also completed a 2,700-foot-long boardwalk from Wickaninnish Bay to Wreck Bay. It is expected to become one of the most popular trails in the park.

Boardwalks laid down on trails, stairs leading to beaches, terraces and rustic bridges were familiar and attractive sights of west coast communities 30 years ago.

But the bulldozer has wiped out most of these quaint features. Cliffs are scarred with roads to beaches and the board walks have become dusty gravel roads.

Soviets Study Ports

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — A group of Soviet scientists and technicians recently visited Newfoundland to take a look at marine terminals at the deepwater port of Come by Chance and at St. John's as part of a scientific exchange agreement between the U.S.S.R. and Canada.

The technical mission, with representatives from all parts of the Soviet Union including experts in research, design and construction of harbor-docking facilities, were gathering information on deep-water wharves.

"They are interested in the way we do things," said M.W. Paul, marine director for the design and construction branch, federal works department, who was the group's host for the Canadian tour.

Paul said the scientists were particularly interested in the Come by Chance docks, some of which go to a depth of 100 feet and more. It's a facility the Soviets don't yet have, Paul noted, and the mission was anxious to acquire the technology because their country wanted to build such ports on its Pacific coast.

A.I. Kuznetsov, head engineer of a Moscow research laboratory, described the Come by Chance piers as "a work of quality."

However, in an interview through an interpreter, Kuznetsov thought "it is too bad everything there is not in use."

The oil refinery which used the terminal has been shut down because of financial difficulties and Kuznetsov expressed the hope it would soon be working again.

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

BROTHER vs. BROTHER
The Whitehead Brothers

In the last two years, two young lads have come to the forefront of chess in my home area of San Francisco. I'm convinced both are destined for high honors in national and international chess. Paul Whitehead is 16. His bushy, wild-looking hair belies his gentle and pleasant temperament. By contrast, his neat, pleasant-faced brother Jay, who is 15, is ferocious in his play and can be quite irritating to his opponents. Both are U.S. chessmasters and both have been winning prizes in tournaments.

Earlier this year, in the Berkeley May Day Championship, Paul came in first, tying with Grandmaster Larry Christiansen of Riverside, each scoring three and a half points out of four. In the Second round, the brothers met, resulting in a hard-fought draw in 46 moves.

In the same tournament, Paul beat Peter Biyiasas, International Chessmaster of Canada, in 52 moves. Here's a game played in the Berkeley event.

GOODBYE, QUEEN

CUPW Blames Press

HALIFAX (CP) — Plagued by a poor public image, some delegates to the Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) convention blamed "the boss press."

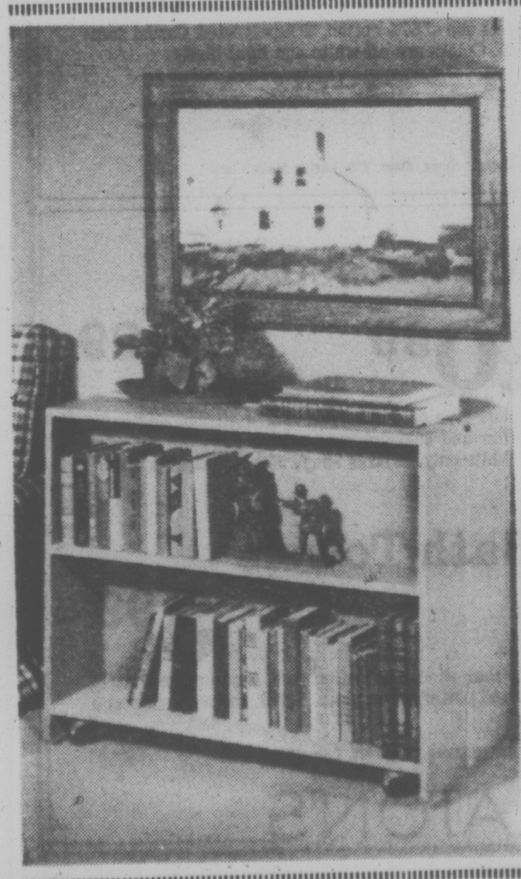
A convention decision permitting reporters to cover an emergency debate on the possibility of a national postal strike amounted to "a rape of trade union principles," one disgruntled delegate told the meeting.

Reporters and cameramen were evicted from the hall before the start of the emergency debate. They were allowed back after the Quebec delegation threatened to boycott the debate unless the press was readmitted.

Jean-Claude Parrot, new CUPW president, said Friday his union plans to launch a public relations campaign to explain its controversial positions to the public.

A few moments later, when new union officers were being sworn into office, Robert Andstein, president of the Halifax local, shouted at reporters seated at the press table: "Why don't you stand and show some respect?"

However, the five reporters present remained seated.



Buffet, Bookshelf, Divider

When it comes to versatility, this unit would be tough to top. Closed, it's a handsome bookcase; open, it's a serving buffet and room divider. The unit, measuring 72x18x30 when open and 36x18x30 when closed, is actually two separate boxes made of ¾-inch oak plywood, mounted on caster wheels and hinged together with piano hinges.

To order the Buffet-Bookshelf-Divider pattern No. 30338, send $2.00 cheque or money order plus 50 cents for postage and handling to:

Hint of Movie-Things to Come?

By TOM ZITO
Washington Post

HOLLYWOOD — Doug Trumbull — director of Silent Running, effects producer for The Andromeda Strain — was one guy not watching 2001 when it showed up on the tube a few months ago. And not just because he'd already seen it a thousand times.

He was 23 and virtually unknown 11 years ago when Stanley Kubrick saw some of his drawings and then hired him to do the special effects on his space odyssey.

And as a definite believer in larger-than-life movies, Trumbull wasn't particularly interested in seeing the universe reduced to 19 inches diagonal.

"That movie just doesn't play on television," he says. "You spend four years trying to make miniatures look gigantic, and then they're back to being miniatures."

That's Trumbull's gripe: Movies are losing their dynamic impact and theatres are turning into rows of shoeboxes.

"The whole experience of seeing a movie has become a lot less adventurous than a lot of other things you can do," he says.

"You know, 18th century themed restaurants built like old castles. You go to a golf course in this town and it's like being at Disneyland. The success of Sensurround (Earthquake brought in $37 million in box office rentals; Midway, $22 million) is proof that the audience wants heightened sensation other than the emotional and dramatic sensation of story and plot. I want to make movies that are total environmental experiences."

Trumbull . . . and one of the robot Hueys from his film Silent Running

Of course, this is just what the movie industry has been clamoring for for years — even as it cranked out sequels to remakes of adaptations.

To this end, Trumbull has developed a high-speed, 70-mm film process that is being backed heavily by Paramount Pictures. The system projects films onto 50-feet-high, 110-feet wide deeply curved screens — 20 feet wider than Cinerama.

In fact, the initial presentation of the process spoofs the original This Is Cinerama.

It has Trumbull replacing Lowell Thomas in a roller coaster, projected on one-tenth of a huge screen. He's holding a microphone and tells the audience that they're about to experience "a new concept in motion picture entertainment."

Then, POW, the screen opens up, and the hands of the viewers dig into the seats as the car careens around banked corners.

"I have complete faith in the process," Trumbull tells a dizzy viewer of the seven-minute preview.

"I know it will knock people out. And I'll tell you why. Dogs go crazy when they see the demo film. We've had three dogs jump through the screen when they saw the thing."

The process, originally called Showscan but now headed for a name change, was to have been premiered at Virginia's King's Dominion on Memorial Day. In May, Paramount decided that the system had too much potential to be revealed in a short at an amusement park, so the company commissioned Trumbull's Future General Corp. to come up with a feature-length film that can be put into several movie houses around the country late next year.

One possibility is a remake of When Worlds Collide, an obvious candidate to cash in on the new science-fiction craze started by Star Wars.

Trumbull estimates it will cost a conventional theatre $85,000 to convert, a price that will include a simple modification of projectors, a new screen and a new sound system that will be called Paramount Sound.

He's experimenting with wrap-around speakers that can be electronically programmed to change the ambient quality of sound.

Trumbull is also testing some devices that sense the changing absorptive qualities of the audience, clothing and seats, and alter the sound to suit the size and makeup of the crowd and the particular theatre.

Right now his office contains — along with one of the robot "Hueys" from Silent Running — two 10-foot-tall speaker systems, a bank of 300-watt amplifiers and a rack of electronic digital sound delay devices.

"Showscan would also be a wonderful vehicle for a giant-screened, super-spectacular news service. I mean, Life magazine isn't around anymore. This could be the living magazine of the '80s," he adds.

"I've offered to take the Showscan system up in the Space Shuttle. It would be a great way to show people what they've been paying for. And if Mauna Loa blows up this year, like everybody says it will, I'd like to be there in a Sherman tank with a camera mounted on it and drive right up to the mouth of the thing."

Wouldn't Take a Breath Test, U.S. Judge Wins Impaired Case

MADISON, Wis. — A judge charged with drunk driving says he refused to take a breathalyzer test because it is unrealiable for measuring alcohol in the blood, although he has found it reliable in cases on which he has ruled. Judge Richard Bardwell, arrested March 4, offered to take a blood test instead of the breath exam, but no blood test was administered. Judge Marshall Norseng of Chippewa County, in a ruling made public Friday, said Bardwell's refusal to take the breathalyzer was reasonable and refused to take the breathalyzer was reasonable and refused to suspend Bardwell's license.

MONTREAL — Two weeks ago Michael di Blasio and Giovanni Battista thought they had struck it rich. They held a winning ticket in the provincially-operated Loto Perfecta and were looking forward to a prize of $546,346. The ticket was one of 39 they had purchased for the draw in which winning numbers are determined by the outcome of a horse race. But when they went to collect their money from the Loto Perfecta offices following the July 15 race, they were told their win was null and void because the variety store where they bought the tickets had failed to submit a copy of the transaction within the required time. Di Blasio, an insurance broker, and Battista, a restaurant owner, filed suit in Quebec Superior Court on Friday demanding that the Variety store owner and the Loto Perfecta corporation pay up. Their lawyer, Gabriel Lapointe, argued that the sale and distribution of tickets had been assigned to "incompetent or inexperienced" persons.

RED DEER — Harris Rogers, 85, a Progressive Conservative member of Parliament from 1958 until 1962, had died in hospital. Rogers is survived by his wife, Gladys; two daughters, Mrs. Richard Norris of Nelson, and Mrs. Cyril Baloom, of Sylvan Lake; and two sons, Douglas of Victoria, and Kent of Campbell River.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Police are looking for three muggers with four sets of teeth. Otis Raymes told police he was walking toward a bus station when he was jumped by three persons. They took his wallet containing $30, and grabbed his $170 dentures from his pocket.

THE OLD SHELL GAME?

NEW WESTMINSTER — A Coquitlam restaurant-owner has been awarded $95.29 in a small claims court action arising out of a dispute involving escargot shells.

Brian Curtis filed the action after a customer refused to pay for his meal when he was informed the escargot shells were extra.

R. J. Findlay insisted that since escargot came in shells, the shells should be included in the purchase of the dinner, and diners should be able to take them home.

Curtis said the shells were synthetic "decoration."

Unsatisfied, Findlay walked out.

Judge Edward O'Donnell rejected Findlay's argument that snails live in shells and accepted Curtis' statement that shells were decoration.

ARBITRATOR DOUBLES GOV'T BID

An arbitrator has awarded the owner of a small car repair shop in Saanich $169,000, twice what the provincial government offered when it expropriated his property earlier this year.

The government also gets stuck with costs of the case, estimated as high as $30,000.

The expropriation involves the shop and land of Vlado Miletic, on Maple between Tolmie and Cloverdale, wanted by the departments of highways and public works for parking and for their own repair depot.

Miletic operated the two-bay business under the name VM Auto Repairs, specializing in Volkswagen servicing.

The government initially offered about $75,000 for the property and Miletic refused it, indicating he was prepared to accept about $135,000.

Settling the value went to a single arbitrator, chartered accountant Ronald Campion, who held four days of hearings earlier this month. He issued his award Friday.

In it he values Miletic's land, a parcel about 52 by 173 feet, at $103,380.66; improvements at $44,594; equipment at $5,844 and business disturbance at $15,000, for a total of $168,818.66.

The government in a later offer said it was ready to pay $83,000. Because the award is above the government bid, the province is also required to pay costs.

EARLY END OFFERED

PM Ready To Trade On Controls

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau offered business and labor a conditional early end to wage-and-price controls Friday, but representatives of the two key economic decision-making groups asked for another two to three weeks to respond to the government's proposal.

During a 4½-hour meeting, Trudeau and other cabinet ministers discussed with labor and business representatives three possible early dates for an end to the program: next Oct. 14, the second anniversary of controls; next Jan. 2 and Oct. 14, 1978.

Legislation implementing the controls is due to expire Dec. 31, 1978.

But Trudeau told a news conference that, in return for an early end to the program, labor and business would have to agree to three conditions.

The conditions are:

—An agreement from both sides to set up a consultative forum with government and other interests after controls end to discuss future directions for the economy;

—An agreement for the setting up of a monitoring agency which would not have authority to roll back excessive price and pay raises but which could question and publicize exceptional increases;

—Some commitment to voluntary restraint which would have the effect of creating pressure for reduced inflation.

Rather than responding immediately, the labor and business spokesmen, headed by Joe Morris, president of the Canadian Labor Congress, and A. J. de Grandpre, president of Bell Canada, asked for two to three weeks to talk over the federal proposals with their constituencies.

Morris said a meeting of the heads of the 115 unions affiliated with the CLC would be held. De Grandpre, speaking for the Business Council on National Issues—which includes the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Chamber of Commerce—said he would begin consultation with business leaders next week.

The request for more time will set back an expected announcement of the date for decontrol. Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said earlier this month that a date would probably be announced in the first week of August.

After the meeting, Macdonald said he hoped to be able to announce a date before Sept. 15.

Trudeau said if business and labor representatives could give a positive response to the government proposals, the government would be prepared to indicate a date. There would have to be "substantive" agreement on the three conditions.

He said next Oct. 14 as a decontrol date would be "very soon but still a possibility" and the beginning of January was another possibility.

But Trudeau added that he would not want to create any expectations until some agreement is reached.

Morris said he wanted clarification of some points in a government paper presented to the meeting before he met with leaders of the affiliated unions.

There was no mention in the paper of any specific wage limit, he said.

Asked if he thought the leaders of affiliates would accept the conditions, Morris said only that he had to check his mandate from the unions from time to time.

But he said he had "trouble fitting the idea of voluntary restraint within the concept of our society."

Trudeau told reporters the government would have to make commitments to spending restraint and similar pledges would have to be made by business and labor, which are jointly responsible with government for the economy.

Quebec Aid Eyed

OTTAWA — Urban Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet says Ottawa will seek other ways to have Quebecers benefit from the federal home insulation subsidies plan following the Parti Quebecois' "sadistic" decision not to participate in the program.

Ouellet told a news conference yesterday it was too early to say just what Ottawa could do to make Quebecers eligible for the federal grants of up to $350 to insulate their homes.

He was "very disappointed" that the PQ would "deprive" its citizens of the federal government's $1.4 billion nationwide program which is due to start Sept. 1.

Quebec Energy Minister Guy Joron announced Thursday that Quebec would not take part because federally imposed conditions for participation were an intrusion into areas of provincial responsibility.

Ouellet rejected this view saying Ottawa does have jurisdiction in this field through Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. The conditions for joining were also "minimal."

To share in the plan, each province must agree to remove the sales tax on insulating materials, enforce lower highway speed limits, impose more stringent building codes and encourage individual metering of gas and electricity in apartment buildings.

The aim of the plan is to lessen energy consumption, and Joron left the door open by saying there should be a federal-provincial conference on the issue soon. The "present conditions" were unacceptable.

Ouellet said that 305,000 Quebec homes built before 1921 would have been immediately eligible for the grants and about 1.5 million more during the next seven years of the program.

Not only would there be energy savings, he said, but it would inject hundreds of millions of dollars into a Quebec economy suffering from high unemployment.

A spokesman for the minister said both the Ontario and Alberta governments have reservations about the program also but that only Quebec had issued a flat no.

Pulp Union Gets Nod To Sign Up Bosses

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Labor Relations Board has ruled that first-line pulp mill supervisors are employees under the Labor Code and eligible for trade union organization.

Although the ruling, dealt specifically with supervisory and technical personnel at the Tahsis Co. Ltd. pulp mill at Gold River, it opens the door to future organization of supervisors and junior management in the forest products industry.

The board's ruling rejected a bid by the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada to represent a group of supervisors on the grounds that an insufficient number were signed up, but its decision on the status of such personnel was clearly meant to establish principles for future applications.

Although the union originally sought representation for ony 34 employees, the board found seven more workers who could be included in the proposed unit, making a total of 41.

The union's application was rejected because at the time it was received there were only 14 people, or less than 35 per cent of the 41 proposed for the unit, signed up as members in good standing.

The significance with which the board viewed the application was reflected in its decision to hold a two-day hearing in Gold River so it could tour the mill facilities and hear evidence from employees who would be included in the proposed unit.

PHYSIOPSYCHO . . . ETC. SPORTS CENTRE SET

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada's first physiopsychotheropanatomy will exercise more than just tongues when it opens in 1978 — the mouthful describes a $3.3 million YM-YWCA family sports facility.

George Watt, executive-director of the Vancouver-area YMCA, and an organizer for the project, said it will be one of the first fully co-educational facilities in Canada.

Watt said the elongated name comes from the traditional YMCA slogan of body, mind and spirit and signals a new approach for a facility.

He said the organization traditionally provided facilities for either men or women, but a family of four could arrive at the new development and play together or go off to four different activities.

The facility includes a swimming pool, gymnasiums, handball courts and steambath facilities. Funding comes from the B.C. government, the city and private donations.

2,4-D Critics Challenged

PENTICTON (CP) — Penticton Mayor Al Kenyon challenged Okanagan health officials and environmentalists Friday to produce "concrete evidence" that the chemical 2,4-D used to combat milfoil weed in nearby Skaha Lake is dangerous to human health.

Mayor Kenyon was angry with statements by Jay Lewis, spokesman for the Okanagan Environmental Coalition, and two health officers that several hundred people risked their health by ignoring warning signs and swimming in the lake immediately after application of the chemical.

"We don't question the fact that it takes large doses of the chemical to cause problems, but no one knows what the long term effects are," said Lewis. "It's well known that 2,4-D causes cancer and birth defects."

Kenyon called the statement that hundreds of people were exposed "just not true."

"I want to see them come up with some concrete evidence once and for all," he said. "Let them put up or shut up."

Kenyon said the herbicide has been used in the Okanagan for between 20 and 30 years and there is no evidence relating it to birth defects or other problems for Okanagan Valley residents.

Karl Marsden, provincial water protection biologist and information officer for the combined mechanical and chemical weed-eradication scheme, said the fact that dead fish were found in the application area following the treatment means nothing "at this point." (See also page 15)

Fifth Slump in Row For Canadian Dollar

Times News Service

For the fifth day in a row, the Canadian dollar declined in value on New York money markets Friday.

At the close of trading, the Royal Bank reported the Canadian dollar was worth 6½ cents less than the U.S. dollar, or $0.9348, down a quarter of a cent from Thursday's close.

The Canadian dollar has been dropping in value in relation to the U.S. dollar for the past year.

The gain by the U.S. dollar, however, come in what some dealers called a confused and illogical market.

135% Increase In Earnings By Mac-Blo

VANCOUVER (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. reports net earnings of $23.6 million or $1.07 a share for the first six months of 1977, compared with $10.1 million or .48 a share for the corresponding period in 1976 — an increase of 135%.

Sales and other income amounted to $827 million, up 11.5 per cent from $742 million last year.

AirWest Stays Up in Air

Five flight crews of management staff are trying to maintain AirWest Airlines service today after pilots walked off the job Friday to protest dismissal of a co-pilot.

The airline operates harbor-to-harbor flights between Victoria and Vancouver as well as a service between Victoria and Seattle among its schedules.

A spokesman said today no new reservations are being taken but ones already made are being honored and crews are trying to meet regular departure times.

Norm Franks, chief financial officer for the airline, said from Vancouver he expects dismissal of co-pilot Bruce Hughes will probably go to an arbitration hearing under terms of a labor contract.

Meanwhile, pilots among management are maintaining what he described as a "shuttle service," meaning flights depart as passengers show up.

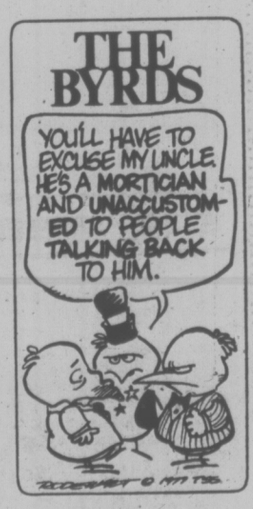
About 30 pilots in Vancouver, along with 60 clerical and maintenance staff, went out on a study session after the dismissal of Hughes.

Wes Anderson, business agent for Local 213 of the Teamsters Union, which represents the company's 95 employees, said Hughes was fired when he failed a route check test. He said Hughes had only been on the job two weeks and wasn't properly trained to pass such a test.

The work stoppage on Friday affected flights between Vancouver and Victoria and Vancouver and Nanaimo. However, flights between Victoria and Seattle continued as usual.

Anderson said the study session will continue until all the captains instruct co-pilots on route checks, or until the chief pilot appears before the pilots and justifies the firing.

The union said the walkout isn't related to current efforts to get a contract. The last agreement expired Oct. 31, 1976.



Lang Hopeful

OTTAWA (CP) — Transport Minister Otto Lang says he remains "quietly optimistic" that a contract dispute with Canada's 2,200 air traffic controllers can be resolved without the strike action being threatened by the union.

The minister's statement yesterday came shortly after the Canadian Air Traffic Control Assoc. (CATCA) was authorized by its membership to launch a series of rotating strikes to back contract demands as of 11:59 p.m. EDT on Aug. 8.

"The talks will continue," Lang said in a telephone interview, "because I am sure both sides want to avoid the pain which such a strike would cause the public."

FERRY TRAFFIC HEAVY

Holiday weekend traffic on B.C. Ferries has been heavy with the longest lineups at Swartz Bay.

A ferry spokesman said mainland-bound motorists waited up to two hours this morning but there were no waits at Tsawwassen.

On the Departure Bay-Horseshoe Bay run there were one-sailing waits at both ends.

Friday afternoon the lineups were slightly longer with the maximum wait of three sailings at Swartz Bay.

No one was left behind at the last sailing anywhere in the system.

TV-Viewing Leads Canadian Leisure Activities

OTTAWA (CP) — Television was the most popular leisure activity among Canadians in 1975, Statistics Canada says.

In a survey for the secretary of state department, the statistics agency also found that more than one-quarter of the 32,000 people over 14 questioned in October, 1973, reported they did not read newspapers.

The leisure study released Friday is the second of its kind done for the department. It did not examine attendance at sports events and time spent on physical recreation.

Ninety-six per cent of those surveyed reported they watch television — 15 per cent for 30 hours or more each week, 44 per cent for between eight and 29 hours, and 37 per cent for between one and seven hours weekly.

Quebecers watch more television than anyone else, the survey indicates. Manitoba has the highest rate of non-viewers — at 7.9 per cent, nearly twice the national average.

Families in the upper-income brackets of $20,000 a year or more spent fewer hours watching television than families in lower-income groups, the survey found.

The secretary of state department said the survey, like the one conducted for it in 1972, "will be of interest to social scientists, planners and policy makers in fields such as arts and culture, recreation, leisure, product marketing and industrial development."

Newspapers were more popular than other parts of the print media. Nearly 40 per cent of those surveyed said they did not read books and 43 per cent said they did not read magazines.

Quebec, at 44 per cent, had the lowest book readership rate in the country; British Columbia at 67 per cent had the highest.

About 85 per cent of survey respondents said they listened to the radio, 43 per cent for less than eight hours weekly, 22 per cent for between eight and 29 hours, and eight per cent for more than 30 hours a week.

Nearly half those questioned said they spent between one and seven hours of their spare time each week listening to records, 15 per cent reported more than seven hours a week, and 38 per cent said they did not listen to records at all.

Nearly one of every three polled said they had a hobby, and 18 per cent said they engaged in some craft as a leisure activity.

Only eight per cent reported playing or practising music for between one and seven hours a week. Another three per cent spent eight or more hours weekly on their music.

Quebec stands out through high attendance at performing arts events — mainly popular music, theatre, dance, ballet, other live shows and arts or crafts festivals, the survey report says.

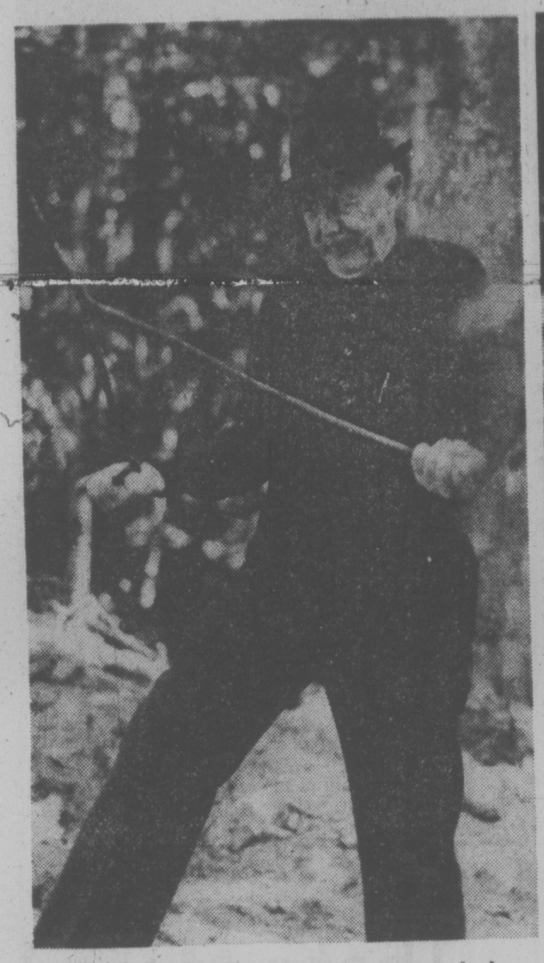
Spry, old Cliff Brackett gets a twinge

Diviner Delights Water Seekers



No doubt about it—there's water below

Story, photos by Derek Sidenius

'Down There' Says the Man and He's Seldom Wrong

When the ministry of education wanted to know where to drill the well for a new school in Terrace, who did they send for?

Cliff Brackett.

When B.C. Ferries wanted to know where to put a well at the terminal on Pender Island, who did they get?

Cliff Brackett.

And when a developer in Sechelt needed someone to tell him where to dig wells in a subdivision, who did he turn to?

Cliff Brackett.

Brackett is a water witcher, a diviner of water, a practitioner of the archaic art of dousing.

Give him a willow — really any forked stick, rod, even a coathanger will do — let him roam and he'll tell you if there's water on your property . . . and where.

He'll point and say: "Down there."

And you look and you see the end of the forked stick trembling like a snake poised to strike. He won't say how far down the water is, but his simple assertion water is there leaves little doubt he's correct.

For one thing you tend to respect a man who is 85 and as fit as a fiddle, spryer than most men half his age.

For another you've got to admit a person who has been divining water for 70 years should know what he's talking about.

He says he's seldom been wrong. And you believe him even if you have seen scientific studies that conclude a water witcher's ability to find water is no different from chance.

★

The Bracketts are something of an institution in the lower Gulf Islands. Brackett's father, a stonemason, moved to Pender Island from New Westminster in 1896 and bought 185 acres on Browning Harbor Road.

Brackett has lived there all his life, raising a family of five boys and two girls.

He began witching for water when he was 15, learning the knack from his brother-in-law George Nelson of Saltspring Island.

"I saw George do it and thought I'd give it a try," he says. "I picked up a stick and it went down for me. That was the start of it. I've been doing it ever since."

He's divined most of the wells on Pender Island and a good number on Galiano, Saturna, Salt Spring and the lower half of Vancouver Island. He's in constant demand but in the past few years has tapered off, doing only four or five a month, mostly for Langford drillers Ray and Herb Krenbrink.

Divining has always only been an avocation for Brackett. His real job was a logger.

He belonged to that sturdy breed of men who, armed with a crosscut saw and springboard felled the giant timbers up and down the coast. He worked the bush long before anyone heard of McMillan or Bloedel. He ran the gamut of jobs — faller, high rigger, rigging slinger, hook tender, camp boss. He retired 20 years ago, serving out the last years managing a booming ground near Nanaimo.

He says he used to row a boat to work when he worked the camps on Saturna and Mayne. He'd also row to the islands to get mail and groceries, and even to Sidney on special occasions, a trip that would take four hours, one way.

★

In the early days he used to waterwitch for nothing. But says he got so busy he decided to charge a fee — $5. Today the fee is $50.

Watching him handle the willow it is impossible to restrain the inevitable question.

"How does it work?"

"You tell me," he shoots back. "Your guess is as good as mine."

Hello Dollies! So Nice To Have You All Around

max low

Dolls have never played a big part in my life.

I vaguely remember being small and having a large and rather ugly cowboy-type doll we used to call California. But that's about all. Even my two daughters didn't dally with dolls for very long.

But I met a woman this week who is very much preoccupied with dolls and is using her family's collections as the basis of a first-of-a-kind show in Victoria next month.

There were nothing but dolls everywhere when I called in to chat with Ginny Marshall-Lang. They covered almost all the available space in the large living room and, in fact, Lady, the family's cocker spaniel, and I had a hard job finding a spot' in which to seat ourselves!

Dolls, dolls, dolls. They sat relaxing on the sofas and chairs, the larger lifelike ones, some of them quite gruesome-looking. They squatted on tables and sideboards, the more petite kinds; and row after row of tiny ones peered down at me from every ledge and shelf.

I couldn't help feeling I was being watched by a thousand eyes in the morning. But Ginny Marshall-Lang was quite at home sitting next to a coffee table strewn with books on dolls (what else?) and surrounded by her quiet friends.

And she talked enthusiastically about the Doll Show, which is to be held in the Georgian Room of the Empress Hotel from noon to 9 p.m. on Aug. 27 and which will feature, as well as the fruits of many others' labor, the work of four generations of Ginny's family.

Ginny's daughter Kristina, who is eight today, has her own collection and is knitting some of the clothes the baby dolls will wear in the show. Between them, the mother and daughter have about 100 dolls, a real mixture, as Ginny says, of older ones, contemporary (what they call modern collectibles) and rag dolls.

Ginny's mother, Maureen Marshall, a Canadian living in California where she's well-known as an artist and dollmaker and president of the San Francisco Women's Artists Society, has brought up her own valuable collection of 18 antique dolls for the show. Made prior to 1925, they are all bisque-headed French or German dolls valued at between $350 to $500 each.

Ginny's grandmother (great-grandmother to Kristina), Victoria artist Greta Stevenson, is dressing some of the dolls for the show, which is to benefit the Norfolk House School building fund.

Not all of those who will display their dolls are connected to Ginny's family, however — or even to Norfolk House School. Many Victoria people, who don't have collections but maybe have one or two old or interesting dolls, will be showing them, Ginny said.

That, in fact, is often the way people get started collecting dolls—having a few left from childhood.

"Little girls are always given a lot of dolls," Ginny explained. "While some do end up at the Salvation Army, many more are kept because parents hate to throw them out and that's how collections start."

In a house so full of dolls, can a little girl learn to love them?

Sure. Kristina, who is more often called Cricket, does, her mother said. The softer ones she carries around and cuddles, just like any other girl, even though she's very much a tomboy and a keen horseback-rider.

"They're not all play dolls for a little girl, of course," Ginny added. "But some of them are 'talking-to' dolls and Cricket sits and talks to them for hours."

Most of them have names and many have interesting period or ethnic costumes and if you want to talk to one or two of them yourself, maybe buy one, win one in a raffle, or perhaps just look them over, then be at the Empress on Aug. 27.

All of those things will be possible at the show, which Ginny called four shows in one.

"As well as the 500 or so dolls on display, there will be about 250 nicely-dressed dolls, some complete with their own wardrobes and little trunks, for sale or auction," explained Ginny.

"There have been doll displays here before but nothing of this magnitude. This show will have the biggest variety of dolls ever shown in one place here before.

"There should be something of interest to everyone—collectors or just people interested in seeing nice dolls. We've tried hard to make it something very special."

Rehab Unit Moves

Greater Victoria Drug and Alchohol Rehabilitation Society has moved from 1080 Meares to suite 202 on the second floor of the Maynard Building, 733 Johnson.

But DARS director George Stegen said the two units, although under the same roof, will be separate.

The Detox Centre, 941 McClure, which also comes under DARS jurisdiction, will continue to operate from that location.

Six-Hour Examination On Ill-Fated Camp Boat

Two marine safety officers have completed an examination of the pontoon boat that became a death trap for seven handicapped persons in Lake Cowichan on Thursday.

Alex Greig of Victoria, and Graham Thraves of Nanaimo, employees of the federal ministry of transport, spent nearly six hours Friday examining the boat.

The results of their findings, which are expected to contain an explanation for why the boat suddenly overturned, will not be made public at least until the inquest which was ordered Friday by Duncan coroner Tom Lines.

The boat, specially designed and built to carry handicapped persons and used at the Lions Easter Seal camp on Lake Cowichan, was seized by police late Thursday.

A police spokesman said today the boat can now be returned to the B.C. Lions Society for Crippled Children which runs the camp.

Police are still withholding the name of the seventh victim, a 55-year-old Victoria man, pending notification of next-of-kin.

The names of the other six were released Friday.

The victims, all adults with mental or physical handicaps, were travelling in the boat to a point down the lake when the vessel turned over. Two counsellors accompanying the group swam to safety.

But the seven handicapped were trapped under the deck, their passage blocked by a wire mesh railing around the permimeter.

An MoT official said on Friday there was no requirement on the society to have the vessel safety-checked before using it, and such an inspection was never done.

Meanwhile, camp officials prepared to re-open the camp on Aug. 7. All campers had been sent home after the tragedy.

Jack Baker, vice-president of the B.C. Lions Society, said "you don't scrap a valuable program because something went wrong."

"We are certainly shocked but we will re-open for the remaining two camps."

Police Squad Averts Melee At Cabaret

A quick show of strength by Esquimalt and Victoria police early today averted what could have developed into a melee outside the Bacchanalia Cabaret at 905 Esquimalt.

An Esquimalt police spokesman said police received a report at 2:10 a.m. of a large crowd of about 50 youths squaring off for a fight in fron of the cabaret.

The spokesman said that instead of checking out the report first, a call was put in immediately for reinforcements.

Within minutes five police cars from Victoria and two from Esquimalt converged on the scene, to the amazement of the combatants.

Upon the arrival of police the fight broke up and the crowd dispersed.

The spokesman said the fight apparently started when a drink was spilled on someone inside the club.

No one was hurt in the short-lived fight and no charges were laid.

Residents have complained repeatedly to council about the noise from the cabaret, but Mayor Young repeated today there is little the municipality can do to stop it.

He said the problem is the anit-noise bylaw applies only to persons and not things. In other words if there is a complaint about noise police have to catch the person making the noise or disturbance. A charge cannot be laid against the business or its owner.

"The law is very technical and very difficult to enforce," he said.

"The noise is a problem for which really there is no easy anwer to."

Mount Douglas Closed

Mount Douglas was closed to the public today because of the high fire hazard from continuing dry weather.

The picnic area to the east of Cordova Bay Road will remain open, said Saanich Ald. Sandy Noel, chairman of the Joint Victoria-Saanich committee which administers the park.

"The kids usually get in there and start a fire once a year," Noel said. The closure is an attempt to stop trouble before it starts.

The road to the summit lookout will be blocked and trails for both hikers and riders will be posted, he said. Brush on the mountain-side is tinder dry.

Ask The Times

Q. We have just arrived from Nova Scotia, and wondered if you can tell us something about the Monkey Tree or Monkey Puzzle tree? I.M.

A. Its botanical name is araucaria imbricata — a native of the western slopes of the Andes in Chile, and Southwest Argentina. It was introduced into England by Dr. Archibald Menzies, surgeon on Capt. Vancouver's ship. It was probably brought here by an English settler. It is fairly hardy and it flowers.

Q. A friend told me it is unlucky for a hare to cross a person's path. Is this true? W.F.

A. According to medieval superstitions, the hare is a melancholy beast. If its flesh was eaten, it generated melancholy in any who partook it. But the Hindus claim the hare is sacred.
